9 Shot as Unions Riot; G.M. Peace In Canada Nears

Settlement of Strike by Wednesday Forecast by Company Aide.

Kansas Zinc Fields Scene of Struggle

Tri-State Members, Unaffiliated, Advance Carrying Clubs.

By the Associated Press.

Galena, Kans., April 11.—Nine members of an independent metal mining union were shot and seriously wounded today as rivalry between their organization and a union backed by the Committee for Industrial Organization flamed into armed conflict in the lead and zinc fields.

A spray of gunfire burst from a C. I. O. office on which a march was being mdae by members of the Tri-State Metal and Smelter Workers Union brandishing pick handles.

Smoke bombs were hurled into the C. I. O. office which is headquarters for the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

The Tri-State Union, also called the 'blue cards," for their bright blue credentials, has been the object of disputed charges that it is in effect a company union. It is not affiliated with any national labor organization.

The trouble in this border town of 5,000 arose after the Tri-State Union members gathered by the hundreds at Picher, Okla., to oppose an announced C. I. O. mass meeting. They found no such gathering in progress but heard reports it had been transferred here.

2,000 Arm Selves.

About 2,000, bearing pick handles or other clubs, congregated at Picher, lining routes to the C. I. O. headquarters there. They wrecked the interior of the Picher C. I. O. office and many of their number proceeded here.

The number of men in the Galena C. I. O. headquarters was not determined. As the marching "Blue Card" column approached within range, the gunfire broke out until a space in front of the downtown store building occupied by the C. I. O. was cleared. Behind barricades in the store, the occupants refused to identify themselves, or to answer demands that they come out.

Fire came from shotguns, pistols and rifles. As the wounded fell they were removed from the scene of battle by their companions, and later taken to hospitals at Joplin, Mo., 7 miles away, and Picher, about 25 miles away.

The wounded were identified as Virgil Darnell, Picher; Frank McDaniels, employe of the Eagle-Picher Lead Co. smelter at Galena; a man named Miller, who would not give his first name, believed to be from Picher; W. E. Ryan, Treece, Kans.; Floyd M. Cox, Treece; Lee Dixon, 15, of Galena; Clyde Ganstine, Galena; Logan Rudd, 21, Picher; Donald Scott, about 45, Picher.

Paraders Flee.

The Tri-State paraders fled in confusion from the gunfire and the smoke of their own bombs. Simultaneously, men inside the building fled to their automobiles, parked in the rear, and sped away.

Sheriff Fred Simkin arrived from Columbus, Kans., and padlocked both the international union and the Tri-State union headquarters.

The sheriff said he did not expect to appeal for outside assistance at present, expressing belief he and other local authorities would be able to handle the situation.

The metal fields in the tri-State area—southwestern Missouri, southeastern Kansas and northeastern Oklahoma—have been the background of labor troubles for two years.

The strike was called in May, 1935, and afterward the mines resumed operations under the eyes of Oklahoma and Kansas National Guards. The International Union charged the "blue card" union was a company union.

A walkout was called May 9, 1935, and J. A. Long, president of the International Union, said then the strike was inaugurated "to bring union recognition, better working conditions, shorter work week and

Recognizing C. I. O. Is Probable Move

Toronto Labor Council Pledges 40,000 to Support Walkout.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Oshawa, Ontario, April 11. The United Automobile Workers of America strike against General Motors of Canada will be settled "about Wednesday," a high company official indicated tonight.

Settlement probably would mean that the corporation would sign an agreement to recognize the U. A. W. A., the official said. He refused to permit his name to be used.

"What else can you do when you have a gun at your head?" he asked.

The Toronto Trades and Labor Council today pledged the support of its 40,000 members to the union's strike against General Motors.

Pledge Resources.

"We will join with you and place our entire resources at your command," John Noble, president of the council, told the 3,700 employes on strike at General Motors' main Canadian assembly plant.

"This is not a fight against General Motors. It is a fight against Premier Mitchell Hepburn and his refusal to accept the delegated representative of General Motors employes."

Noble was referring to the fact that Hepburn barred Hugh Thompson, U. A. W. organizer, from a conference because he was "a paid, outside agitator." The union withdrew from the conference and negotiations collapsed.

Hepburn, denouncing John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization as "agitators," has promised to "call out an army if necessary" to protect General Motors property.

The threat to close General Motors plants in the United States was reiterated today at a mass meeting in Memorial Park.

"The automobile workers of the United States will not wait for many more days before taking definite action," Thompson said.

"Won't Stop March."

C. H. Millard, president of the local U. A. W. Union, added:

"We are on the march and we won't stop until we have something to say about the terms at which we sell our labor."

Only a skeleton picket line patrolled the gates of the plant during the mass meeting, but after it was over the strikers returned. The strike was 100 per cent effective and no one was allowed to pass any of the 28 picket posts and enter the factory grounds.

Yesterday the employes relaxed the picketing long enough to permit the removal of parts needed for ambulances, fire engines and other emergency equipment.

Thompson charged that Alfred P.

Killer Hangs Self Just Before Date Of Electrocution

Nashville, Tenn., April 11 (AP).—J. B. Whitten, scheduled to be electrocuted tomorrow for the murder of his former sweetheart, was found strangled to death with a bedsheet in his "death row" cell at the State prison today.

Whitten, about 27, stood his bunk on end, tied a strip of the sheet on the top cross piece and the other end around his neck, officials said. His feet still touched the floor, however, and his death was attributed to strangulation. Whitten was convicted of slaying Mrs. Lillie Mae Cook in Chattanooga.

Critical Injuries Suffered in Fall By Tris Speaker

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 11 (AP).—Tris Speaker, who managed the Cleveland Indians to the world series championship in 1920, is in critical condition tonight in Lakeside Hospital here with a skull fracture received in a fall from the second-story porch of his home.

He also suffered a badly lacerated face and a fracture of the left arm.

His physician, Dr. E. B. Castle, said, "His condition is critical, but I think he'll make it. He has taken care of himself and he is strong."

Speaker was putting up a flower box for his wife when he fell. A porch railing gave way.

Estimate of Visitors to See Cherry Blossoms Varies From 300,000 to 500,000; Many Unable to Find Shelter.

Lured by the famed Japanese cherry blossoms, the mightiest throng of visitors in Washington's history poured into the city yesterday. The result was the greatest traffic jam this oft-jammed National Capital has ever known.

Hotels and rooming houses were filled and thousands of visitors had to be accommodated in Baltimore, Alexandria and Frederick.

How many were in the multitude that swept through the city's gates there was no way of determining exactly. Estimates ranged from 300,000 to 500,000. All that police officials and such organizations as the American Automobile Association could say was that it was the greatest influx Washington has ever seen—greater than any inaugural crowd, greater than the host the Shriners brought here in 1923, greater than that which Lindbergh's return attracted in 1927.

Capt. Patrick Carroll's harassed but good-natured park policemen in the cherry blossom area did compile some figures that gave an idea of the size of the invasion.

These indicated that approximately 213,000 men, women and children journeyed to Potomac Park to see the fairyland that nature had created with her ethereal blossoms.

President Roosevelt joined the throng that viewed the world-famous spectacle, but it took all the park police and their motorcycles and sirens to open a wedge for his car.

K. of C. Starts Crusade to Rid Nation of Reds

By the United Press.

New York, April 11.—Charging communism is responsible for sit-down and other strikes in the United States and Canada, the Knights of Columbus tonight launched an "endless crusade" to defeat "the most damnable organization in the world."

"Our churches, our homes and our industries will be destroyed by communism unless we bring this fight to a showdown," said Martin H. Carmody, of Grand Rapids, Mich., supreme knight of the K. of C., which has 600,000 members.

Four hundred delegates of councils in the New York district met tonight and formally launched the program, which officials said will be under way throughout the Nation within ten days.

The Knights of Columbus is a national organization of Catholic laymen.

"This is an appeal to the Christian people of the world to prepare to meet the greatest menace to civiliation today," Carmody said. "Ours is to be an endless crusade—until the war is over."

He said the drive would be against the three main objectives of communism: Abolition of religions, families, and orderly representative government.

"We are inclined to think there is a bad situation in Russia, and that Spain is close behind," Carmody

Senate to Get Plan to Limit Justices to Nine

Amendment to Be Offered Along With Proposal for Increase of Six.

By Russell Smith.

A proposal to fix at nine the number of Supreme Court justices, through amendment of the Constitution, will be placed before the Senate along with the President's bill for a six-justice increase, under plans announced last night by enemies of judiciary revision.

The first maneuver to that end was to be made in the Senate today, when Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, perhaps the most active opponent of the Administration on this issue, will offer a substitute amendment for his pending amendment providing compulsory retirement of Supreme Court justices at 75 and voluntary retirement at 70.

The substitute amendment, Senator Burke said last night, will carry the substance of the original proposal, but will append to the retirement specificatoins two sections, one of which will prohibit any change in the number of justices.

The other new section will restrict retirement of justices to the extent that not more than two may be retired in any calendar year following adoption of the amendment. Under this requirement, only the oldest two of the justices would leave the bench under the retirement plan in any one year, even if more than that number were 75 or older.

This development coincided with the victory in a Texas primary of British Fleet to Fire on Rebels If Necessary to Guard Shipping; Loyalists Trap 5,000 Insurgents

Besieged Soldiers Facing Slaughter

Casualties Mount Into Thousands; Capital Is Bombarded.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, April 11.—Gen. Jose Miaja, commanding government forces in the defense of Madrid, announced tonight his troops had dynamited the Manzanares River Bridge, trapping an estimated 5,000 rebel troops in the University City suburb without an avenue of retreat.

Government troops moved up into new positions, Miaja said, precluding any possibility the rebels might reestablish contact with the main insurgent forces outside the capital and leaving the way open for slaughter of the trapped besiegers.

This development climaxed four days of the fiercest fighting of the Spanish war in which casualties on both sides were estimated in the thousands as loyalist forces sought to break the "iron ring" Francisco Franco had drawn around the capital.

At the same time that terrific blasts of dynamite were demolishing the Manzanares Bridge, the capital itself was being subjected to the heaviest artillery bombardment it has suffered since the early days of the five-month siege.

Seeking to stem the relentless advance of the loyalists, insurgent gunners outside the city poured shells into the capital at 2-minute intervals for almost an hour, taking a severe toll of civilian lives.

Madrid Is Shelled.

The shelling came from Mount Garabitas, in the Case de Campo, the park on the city's western edge which formerly was the pleasure ground of Bourbon royalty.

Residential districts as well as the downtown section of Madrid suffered. The Gran Via, Madrid's Broadway, took the heaviest punishment.

As the shells screamed over and explosions raised clouds of dust and smoke, pedestrians scurried into ground floors and basement retreats.

Fire trucks and ambulances dashing through the streets to stricken areas added to the din and confusion.

Authorities said the bombardment was the heaviest Madrid has experienced. Gen. Miaja called it "vengeance," and charged German experts were directing the fire.

Heaviest Bombardment.

Fighting continued fiercely in the Casa de Campo sector.

Insurgent headquarters at Vitorio, in northern Spain, said a Basque attack on their positions at Mount Amboto had failed. A score of the attackers were slain.

Having driven a wedge into the Basque country, the insurgents were preparing for the last final push toward Bilbao, Basque capital.

Emaciated in appearance, 380 prisoners from the Basque territory were brought to the Vitorio jail. Most of them were peasants, who had little to say except that they were conscripted by force.

Mooney in Court Today Will Hear Plea for Freedom

San Francisco, April 11 (AP).—Stocky, graying Thomas J. Mooney will walk into California's spacious Supreme Court chambers tomorrow to be the most interested auditor of final arguments on his new plea for freedom from a life sentence for the 1916 Preparedness Day bombing.

In a sense, his long and bitterly fought case will be new to the seven black-robed justices, for it has outlasted the State Supreme Court careers of those who 19 years ago decreed he should die on the gallows.

Arguing Mooney's bid for a writ of habeas corpus will be George T. Davis, who was hardly out of knee-breeches that July 22, 1916, when Preparedness Day marchers were halted by the explosion which killed ten persons and injured 40.

3 Die as Flames Sweep California Gold Mining Town

Jameston, Calif., April 11.—Fire swept through this historic "Mother Lode" gold mining town today, destroying a row of frame dwellings and burning to death three persons.

The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Yockey were found in the charred ruins of their home, and later searchers found the burned body of J. F. Hanna, 34, a laborer who lived with the Yockey family.

Star of Silents, Talkies Injured Fatally in English Town.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 11.—Ralph Ince, of Boston, Mass., motion picture director and actor, was killed today when an automobile in which he was riding with his wife struck an iron standard at Kensington.

Mrs. Ince, who was driving the car, suffered face lacerations.

Ince, formerly connected with the picture industry in Hollywood, had been in England for three years, directing for Irving Asher and Warner Bros.

Ralph Ince was born in Boston in 1887 and entered motion pictures as an actor after a brief career on the legtimate stage, which included an appearance in Richard Mansfield's company in "The College Widow."

He first directed pictures for the old Vitagraph Co. After the introduction of talking pictures, Mr. Ince directed or acted in a long series of pictures for Columbia, Radio, Universal, First National and Monogram companies.

Green Demands U.S. Provide for 3,000,000 Jobs

A. F. L. Head Asks Increased Spending as President Plans Cut.

Provision by the Federal Government of 3,000,000 jobs through an expanded works program in the next fiscal year was demanded last night by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Green's statement added fuel to the flames of a controversy expected to reach its climax this week when President Roosevelt sends to Congress his revised budget estimates for the new fiscal year, predicted by Congressional observers to call for scaling down of the present 2,200,000-job program.

Relief-budget differences were dramatized last night with a denunciation by Representative Snell (Republican), of New York, of public spending policies which he said are carrying the country "inexorably along the path toward a disastrous inflation" at the same time Green was insisting upon an increase in this spending.

Small Gain Reported.

Green contended that a works program which furnishes 3,000,000 persons with jobs is the minimum program which can provide for those in need, and he said even such a program as that would leave 4,500,000 still jobless. His statement follows:

"With the beginning of spring business in February employment started upward again. Gains were small, however, and in all only 280,000 have gone back to work since January; employment is not yet back to the December, 1936, level. In February 1937 our preliminary figures show 9,722,000 still without normal work in industry or government compared to 10,002,000 in January and 8,990,000 in December.

'Of those unemployed in February, 2,939,000 had work at some time during the month ended February 15 on PWA, WPA or other Federal emergency projects. All of the remaining 6,783,000 are in need of work, but for many of them the need is so desperate that health is being undermined and irreparable injury done to children. Just how large this number may be, no one knows. We do know that from 300,000 to 500,000 families where the breadwinner needs work have been

Fascists Suffer Heavy Defeat In Belgian Vote

Electors of Brussels Pick Van Zeeland Over Rexist Degrelle.

By the Associated Press.

Brussels, April 11.—Belgian fascism suffered a stunning defeat today as Brussels district electors chose Paul Van Zeeland, American-educated premier, to represent them in Parliament.

Voters flatly rejected the Rexist leader, Leon Degrelle, Van Zeeland's foe, in a test of Fascist and anti-Fascist strength.

The vote was 275,840 to 69,242.

Van Zeeland, whom Degrelle attacked as "American-bred—Yale and Princeton," obtained 75.89 per cent of the votes cast.

The Rexists, backed by their Flemish Nationalist allies, polled 4,479 votes less than the two parties received in May, 1936, in the last election. Then they acted independently.

This showing stung the followers of Degrelle because it made their defeat even more complete than Premier Van Zeeland hazarded it would be in his pre-election forecast.

The more candid of the Rexists privately acknowledged they had not expected Degrelle to win but rather that they foresaw increased support sufficient to show that Van Zeeland had lost the country's confidence.

King Leopold thus would have been obliged to dissolve Parliament and in ensuing general elections the Rexists hoped to gain a majority in their campaign for the abolition of parties and creation of a corporate state.

Reorganization Forecast.

Seasoned observers said the ringing victory of the premier, who was pledged to fight dictatorship, did not necessarily mean the end of Belgian fascism but might oblige Degrelle to reorganize his forces.

The Rexists made gains in 4 of the 13 sub-districts forming the Brussels district, but these were wiped out by heavy losses elsewhere.

Brussels City gave 76.53 per cent of its vote to the premier.

The 30-year-old Degrelle, immediately the results became known, announced "the fight will begin anew tomorrow."

He attributed his defeat to a public letter issued by the primate of

Police Are Puzzled by Fatal Shooting of D. C. Student, 18

Authorities were puzzled last night in the death of Byrne T. Burns, 18-year-old pre-medical student, whose unclad body was found with a bullet hole in the forehead yesterday morning by his father, Dr. William Burns, prominent Washington diagnostician.

Suicide or accidental death were the alternatives being probed by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, who was still investigating the case last night and who had not returned a verdict.

The youth's mother, Persia Burns, was speeding to Washington by plane this morning from New York, unaware that her only son was dead. She returned by boat from a pleasure trip to Havana this morning, disembarking at New York, informed only that her son was "ill."

Dr. Burns was near collapse yesterday at his home at 3100 Ellicott street northwest. He found his son, a second-year medical student at George Washington University, lying dead on the floor of the youth's private bathroom, behind locked doors.

Inside the bathroom, according to relatives, a cleaning rod for the young man's revolver was found. Relatives also said they found the gun in his left hand, whereas young Byrne was right-handed. This, they said, indicated accidental shooting while cleaning the weapon.

Police, however, said they could not reconcile the fact that the boy locked the door and was undressed, and that the shooting took place where no one could hear the shot, to the theory of accidental death.

Dr. Burns attended a small party with friends Saturday night, coming home late. He did not look into his son's bedroom before retiring. He arose, went down to breakfast at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, to eat, as was his custom, with his son.

Emergency Session of Cabinet Acts as Bilbao Is Blockaded.

Six Food Vessels In French Harbor

No Indication English Will Attempt to Relieve Starving City.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

London (Monday), April 12. The British cabinet, meeting in emergency session late yesterday, decided to defy the Spanish rebel blockade of Bilbao and gave orders to the battleship Hood, 46,200-ton pride of the British navy, to fire on Spanish rebel ships "if necessary" to protect British shipping on the high seas.

The Hood arrived at midnight off Bilbao on the Spanish Biscay coast where Gen. Francisco Franco's rebel fleet has stretched a "starvation" blockade.

There was no indication, however, that the Hood would be given orders to smash the Bilbao blockade by escorting six British steamers—now anchored in the French port of St. Jean de Luz—into Bilbao to unload their cargoes of foodstuffs for 100,000 starving refugees crowded into the besieged city.

Franco has warned that his ships and planes will bombard and destroy any ship—Spanish or foreign—that tries to enter Bilbao with food or "other materials of war."

Cabinet officials said they had agreed to persist in the British refusal to recognize the Spanish rebels as a belligerent power, but beyond this announcement they refused to discuss what orders might be radioed to the commander of the Hood.

The Daily Telegraph reported that the cabinet refused to give a naval escort to the food ships, or any other ships traveling in Spanish territorial waters.

Decisions Made Cautiously.

The cabinet's decisions on the delicate situation—one of the worst that has confronted Britain in years, from the standpoint of international rights—were made cautiously.

It was learned, however, that either Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin or Foreign Minister Anthony Eden will make an "important announcement" on the whole question of the rebel blockade in Commons today.

The explanation probably will be made in answer to a question by Maj. Clement Attlee, Laborite opposition leader.

A government spokesman, explaining the cabinet's secrecy, said the first official statement on the situation must be delivered in Parliament and "any other versions must be regarded as conjectural."

The legal situation is an intricate one. Although British policy is to treat as "pirate craft" any vessel halting, seizing or attacking a British ship on the high seas, it is understood that British naval vessels have orders not to extend their protection to British ships inside Spain's 3-mile territorial limit.

One of the tricky questions facing the cabinet was whether Franco's warships would be able to enforce any effective blockade.

It was reported unofficially that Britain might attempt to solve the crisis by asking Franco to recognize a protective zone around the port of Bilbao, immune from hostilities. Such zones have been set up around Barcelona and other loyalist ports.

The cabinet members, violating the traditional British "week-end" to gather at 10 Downing street as they did in World War days and more recently during the crisis over Edward VIII's abdication, met at the call of Prime Minister Baldwin.

Population Starving.

They were confronted with the task of deciding whether to give armed escort to the British steamers, or to recognize the rebel naval blockade and thus give Gen. Franco's rebels the technical status of belligerents.

The delicate decision hung on whether the cabinet was prepared to admit—as Franco has claimed—that foodstuffs are materials of war.

The rebel generalissimo, with ships dotting Biscay Bay outside Bilbao and with 120 airplanes patrolling the coast, has warned that he will destroy any ship, Spanish

Jefferson Memorial Controversy Befuddled By Fate of Cherry Blossoms, Shrine Design

By Gerald G. Gross.

Following is the second in a series of articles discussing the controversy raging over plans to build a memorial to Thomas Jefferson at the Tidal Basin in Potomac Park which would have greater bulk than the Lincoln Memorial and result in removal of most, if not all, of the Japanese cherry trees.

Huge quantities of academic nonsense have been bandied in the Thomas Jefferson Memorial controversy.

The issue is being befuddled by nebulous discussions of the influence of classic architecture, speculation on the fate of the Japanese cherry blossoms, arguments on the advantages and disadvantages of an architectural competition and attacks upon the motives of John Russell Pope.

The following facts, obtained at official sources and heretofore undisclosed, may help let in a bit of fresh air:

1. Present plans for the memorial project at the Tidal Basin, as they affect the Japanese cherry blossoms, call for removal of 400 to 500 of the trees, or well over half the total.

2. One of the principal executives concerned with execution of the project, and whose name therefore cannot be mentioned, believes the Pope design is altogether too large.

3. Neither the National Capital Park and Planning Commission nor the Fine Arts Commission, both of which exist for the express purpose of shaping the public building destiny of "the most beautiful city in the world," was invited by the Boylan Commission to pass upon either the design or location of the proposed memorial before the Congressional body "unanimously" approved both last February 18.

4. The planning and arts groups, while uncritical of the location chosen, are far from satisfied with the memorial design in all its pretentious details, landscaping treatment and various other features of the Pope scheme. Both have completed, and are submitting this week to Chairman Boylan, separate reports explaining their objections and offering alternate solutions.

The Boylan Commission, which was given wide powers by Congress, is fully authorized to accept the suggestions all the way, pluck a few for adoption or disregard them all.

According to the law under which it is now functioning, "the commission may avail itself of the assistance and advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, and the Commission of Fine Arts shall, upon request, render such assistance and advice."

Note that consultation with the visited by relief agencies and found to be in serious want. These families, although work is denied them, are being temporarily tided over by local relief. Thousands more apply for relief and are turned away because funds are lacking. It is estimated that at present WPA is falling short by at least 1,000,000 jobs of providing for unemployed families where health and morals are in danger.

Calls Program Inadequate.

"In planning for the 1937-38 Federal budget we must recognize that the present Federal Works Program is inadequate. We must have a program planned to give work on useful projects for the unemployed; it should not be on a relief roll basis. It is an insult to self-respecting American citizens to tell them 'You cannot have a job unless you declare yourself a pauper.' Such a policy, if pursued beyond the emergency, will tend to make paupers of millions who will later be needed for responsible work. By planning now for a program to provide 3,000,000 jobs, it is reliably estimated, we can care for those unemployed who are in serious need during the 1937-38 fiscal year and save the hundreds of thousands whose health and morals are now threatened.

"With 9,722,000 now unemployed, we cannot possibly count on reducing unemployment below an average of 7,500,00 in the fiscal year 1938—not even if the rapid gains of last year continue. A works program averaging 3,000,000 is the least that can adequately provide for those in need and even this leaves 4,500,000 without regular income. A social security program which does not provide for all the unemployed cannot give real security. Public works are an essential part of any adequate social security program. It is high time to look facts in the face and plan to give jobs without the stigma of relief to those who cannot find work in private industry."

Deficit Increased.

Snell's position as Republican floor leader lent added significance to his attack on Federal spending, the first such criticism to come from Republicans at this session of Congress. The New Yorker said that "the official Treasury statement for April 1 reveals a still swelling tide of bootstrap spending" by the Administration, adding that Federal revenue for the first nine months of the present fiscal year was $759,701,757 over the corresponding period of the year before. He went on:

"Despite this tremendous increase in cash income "the final budget deficit, including public debt and trust fund operations, shows an increase of $115,762,291 as of April 1, this year, over the deficit for the same nine months of the previous fiscal year. * * *

"Here is the Nation's realization after four years of experiment with the New Deal promise that recovery automatically would bring increased revenue, decreased expenditures and a balanced budget. Under the prevailing policy of rubber-stamp lump-sum appropriations, only the President can decide when expenditures shall be curtailed * * *

"Reviewing these figures, it is not difficult to understand why President Roosevelt proposed to abolish the office of Comptroller General."

Green Supports Mayors.

In a summary of unemployment conditions also issued yesterday by the Department of Labor, Secretary of Labor Perkins estimated that 9,000,000 job placements had been made in the two fiscal years ended June 30, 1936, and attributed to the public works program a major share in making such placements.

Green's appeal for an increased works program followed a similar plea made to the President last week by Governors of six of the most populous States in the Union. The United States Conference of Mayors also has said local governments cannot assume a relief load which will care for those left out in the proposed reduction in Federal relief expenditures, while a group of House members, headed by Representative Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, is waging strenuous warfare for increased appropriations for relief.

Injured Man Held As Miami Fugitive

Peter F. Wold, 39, New York City, who told police he was shot in a barroom brawl in Augusta, Ga., was placed under a police guard in Gallinger Hospital yesterday as a fugitive from justice in Miami, Fla.

His back and shoulders sprayed with buckshot pellets, Wold applied to Dr. John F. Finnegan, 1242 East Capitol street, for treatment Saturday. Dr. Finnegan notified the police and took the wounded man to Sibley Hospital.

Yesterday a telgram was received from Sheriff D. C. Coffman, of Miami, asking that Wold be detained. The wire said he answered the description of a burglar shot while ransacking a home in the Southern city.

Wold had told the police he was shot in a fight in a barroom in Georgia and had fled the town. He previously had worked as a waiter at the Hollywood Hotel in Miami, he said.

New Faces in Congress.

Senator Pepper Worked Way Through School for Education

SENATOR CLAUDE PEPPER.

New Florida Legislator Served as Pedagogue, Carted Coal and Served as Waiter; To Fight for the Underprivileged.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Stars fell on an Alabaman's hopes for the future in the spring of 1916. If anybody had told Claude Pepper then that he would soon survive the catastrophe and would one day don a senatorial toga, he would have replied, "But I don't want to be a Senator. All I want is a college education, and I won't have a chance to get that—now."

Hopeless words for a strapping lad of 16, who had just finished the Camp Hill (Ala.) High School. But, in effect, they voiced the disappointment he felt when he learned the family purse was flattening out like a punctured football. That meant he couldn't enter college the next fall.

It looked, in fact, as if young Pepper's plans would have to be plowed under for good. Papa Pepper hinted that the only way the boy could make his dreams come true was to pay his own way. And Claude knew cotton picking around Camp Hill wasn't exactly a tuition-earning job. He determined to find out what other opportunities would fall in the way of a likable young man with a high school diploma.

Landed School Post.

In a month's time he had signed a contract to teach school in Dothan, a small community near his home. Meanwhile, he had discovered another way to make money. Before his school started, he tried his hand at operating a small clothes-leaning-and-pressing shop, and emerged from the brief eperience a wiser, happier, and more enterprising young man. From then on his career, step by step, has been an impressive example of the truth of copy-book maxims, and proof that some of Horatio Alger's heroes weren't as far-fetched as some people seem to think.

His year of teaching finished, he took a turn as a traveling hat cleaner, and then went to work in a steel mill. By that time, the possibility of a college education had begun to take shape. In the fall of 1917, he made up his mind to enter the University of Alabama.

"I knew what was ahead of me," he recently reminisced, in his soft Southern drawl. "I knew I'd have to work my way, if I managed to stay, and I was lucky enough to find a 4 to 7 job 'rolling coal' for furnaces around the campus."

Later, he waited on tables. Progressed from that to managing a mess hall. Participation in virtually every debating and oratorical contest that took place on the campus, and a brief bit of experience in the Army in 1918, comprised some of his other extra activity. But despite all this, he finished the university in three years and made Phi Beta Kappa.

Entering Harvard law school in 1921, he received his degree in 1924, and then spent a year teaching in the University of Arkansas before he decided to go into private law practice. In 1926 he hung out his shingle at Perry, Fla.

"Looking back over those years before I took to law, I believe I learned as much out of college as in," Senator Pepper said recently. "But the college experience meant a lot to me that I can't put into words. I feel strongly that every boy and girl who wants an education should have an opportunity to get it. Some of them can't put themselves through college. I was lucky. I had friends to help me get jobs, and to encourage me through the lean periods. Poor as I've been all my life, I've always been rich in friends."

His talent for making and keeping friends stood him in good stead when he entered politics. In 1929, he was elected to the Florida Legislature. From then on, his eyes were on a seat in Congress.

Pepper's early experience in a steel mill and in other lines of work convinced him of the merits of organized labor. When he sought a place in the Senate, he wooed the labor vote first and had it almost sewed up for the race when he learned there would be no race. He holds the record of being the only person swept into the Seventy-fifth Congress without opposition. He became a benedict soon after election.

Dark-haired and distinguished looking, Pepper has the dignity expected of a Senator without being pompous about it. Has high hopes of putting through legislation that will help physically handicapped children and the underprivileged of all ages.

He takes his job seriously—does this second youngest Senator of the Seventy-fifth Congress. "There is so much that needs to be done," he says by way of covering the subject with a blanket statement.

Turks, Yugoslavs Ready for Parley

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, April 11 (AP).—Alterations in the Balkan political scene were believed in prospect today as Premier Ismet Inonu, of Turkey, and his foreign minister, Tevfik Rustu Aras, arrived here for conversations.

The visit revived speculation concerning the proposed League of Balkan nations, to which Bulgaria presents the chief obstacle. Premier Milan Stoyandinovich and other officials received the visitors, who planned to remain until April 19, then go to Sofia, Bulgaria.

Mexican Strike Settled.

Mexicali, Lower Calif., April 11 (U.P.).—Settlement of a general strike that paralyzed business here two days was announced today by Gov. Rodolfo Sanchez Toboada. The strike was in protest against rates charged for power and light by Cia de Luz de Mexicali, S. A. Terms were not disclosed.

Coughlin Fears New Depression

Royal Oak, Mich., April 11 (U.P.).—Father Charles E. Coughlin, in his final broadcast until next October, today predicted "a depression that will make Mr. Hoover look like an archangel" would grip the United States within a year.

"By October," he shouted, "you will live to see your meager pay envelope unable to pay for your food and clothing."

The radio priest made his final address a bitter broadside against the New Deal, the "international bankers and the money changers," and politicians in general.

"Any jackass can make himself a Robin Hood with other people's money," he said, referring to the New Deal's relief expenditures.

Father Coughlin charged that policies of the New Deal had failed, and that the only need was assumption by the Government of control over money.

Visitors' Poll Shows Division On Court Plan

President's Proposal Has But Slight Edge With Cherry Crowd.

Representative Washington visitors didn't mind saying yesterday that they came here to see the cherry blossoms—not to register their political sentiment.

But the Supreme Court issue is no ordinary subject, and since they were asked—and they were—they didn't mind taking wide-open eyes off the Japanese blooms long enough to declare that their approval of President Roosevelt's court change proposals is not quite so unanimous as that which they are willing to lavish on the glorious blossoms.

A poll of the cherry blossom area, to which had flocked sightseeing voters from every State, gave the President only a narrow edge as far as this fight is concerned.

Returns from rather widely scattered sections gave President Roosevelt's plan 50 ayes and 46 nays.

The tenor of sentiment was by no means even. While the totals are close, they just happened to be that way when the poll closed at 6 p. m. The President had had his ups and downs throughout the afternoon of a poll-takers' wanderings.

For example, the Washington Monument grounds went to the President's side by a vote of 7 to 5, and the Lincoln Memorial indorsed the plan to enlarge the court by the substantial margin of 10 to 4.

Loses at Boathouse.

But the Tidal Basin boathouse said "no" to the tune of 7 to 6, and the Potomac Park polo grounds gave the plans to add new justices a resounding smack by contributing 10 nays and only 1 aye.

Just to show how close the battle is, here are the Reflecting Pool figures. People on the north side favored the President's ideas, 7 to 3, while those on the south side fired back 9 nays and just 2 yeas.

The east end, where the fountains were flourishing, was tied.

If the results of this sampling of public opinion are as inconclusive as they are unscientific, it's not because the voters have indefinite ideas.

Take, for example, the remarks of Adelaide Anderson, St. Paul schoolteacher. "This isn't a case of packing the Supreme Court," she declared, "it's a frame-up on the Constitution."

And Isador Fein, of New York, said "I voted for the President last November, and I'm not running out on him now. He knows what it's all about. Just wait and see."

Dan Evers, of Philadelphia, didn't mince words either; when he contributed this quote: "The President has tried to help us, hasn't he? What's the Supreme Court done—but sit down?"

From Mrs. Hazel Henderson, of New Hampshire, came the opinion: "The Supreme Court may have some old men—but it's in the right. So what are you going to do about it?"

Hans Mengel, of Hartford, wanted to be logical about it. "Personally, I'd like to see the court more liberal," he said, "but I can't see how the President's plan is going to be the answer."

But he voted "yes" just the same.

The poll-taker approached two vacationers from Pennsylvania. They said they taught school. One answered, "I'll back Chief Justice Hughes against Franklin D. Roosevelt."

The other shivered and said, "Now if I could tell you why I put my fur coat in moth balls, and came down here in this light stuff, you'd have something."

On the Supreme Court issue she said she wasn't interested in the slightest.

H. Ince, who died at sea on a yachting expedition, Ralph acted and directed in many of the most successful pictures of Douglas McLean and Charles Ray.

As a youth, Ralph studied art with Dan McCarthy, cartoonist, then on the staff of the New York World, and later did magazine illustrating and cartoons for the New York Mirror and the Evening Telegram.

Ince was attracted to the movies by an offer from Windsor McCay, who sought his assistance in making animated cartoons for the flickers. From this field he was graduated into acting, and starting in 1906 he took the title role in a series of Vitagraph pictures based on the life of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Ince directed and starred in "The Goddess," one of the first and biggest serial pictures ever filmed. He directed Ray in a come-back attempt, "Dynamite Smith;" produced, directed and starred in "The Sea Wolf," based on Jack London's novel;; directed Peter B. Kyne's story, "Breed of the Sea." His later directorial efforts included "South Sea Love," "Hard-Boiled," "Hurricane," which starred Hobart Bosworth, and "Chicago After Midnight." He was co-starred with Aileen Pringle in a talkie, "Wall Street."

Mr. Ince was divorced in 1932 from Lucille Mendez, artist, who said he objected to and interfered with her career.

Threats of Strikes in Britain To Test Conciliation Powers

By the Associated Press.

London, April 11.—Rising discontent in the ranks of British labor, with prospects of large-scale strikes in several industries in the near future, confronted the British government today with the severest test in years of its extensive labor arbitration machinery.

As in the United States, returning prosperity has brought a rising insistence of labor on a larger share of the fruits of industry.

The latest rumbles of unrest come from the railway workers, who have demanded that operators open negotiations on higher wage claims.

This week—April 15 and 16—600,000 coal miners are to vote on a proposal to strike in protest against the refusal of the owners of Harworth Colliery, in Nottinghamshire, to conduct collective bargaining with the local of the Mine Workers' Federation of Great Britain.

All London's buses, subway trains and surface cars may be tied up May 1 if the London Transport Board refuses a demand by the Transport and General Workers' Union demand for a 7½-hour day. The board has declined to consider the demand, but the fact that the strike would come just before the coronation May 12 may cause it to reconsider.

Wage Raises Tried.

It was agreed to talk again with union representatives April 19.

Already employers have tried to stem the rising discontent with wage and other concessions. Sixty thousand women and girls employed in engineering trades will receive an increase of 24 cents a week beginning tomorrow.

Three thousand clerks of the unemployment assistance board were given higher pay scales and longer holidays from April 1. Many firms have announced they will give cash donations or extra holidays in commemoration of the coronation next month.

One major cause of labor unrest has been the charge that the Government's $7,500,000,000 re-armament program has brought no general wage increases. Labor leaders have declared labor should share in the armament profits. Labor also has resented the growing tendency to establish factories in the London area, away from the north, where the unions first became strong.

Typical of the discontent is a strike now under way at a Beardmore, Scotland, iron works which has a large backlog of orders for new warships as well as for the subsidized sister liner to the Queen Mary.

Labor Ahead of U. S.

Thus far the ministry of labor, armed with laws framed to prevent a repetition of the general strike of 1926, has been able to avoid nation-wide walk-outs.

British trade unions already have gained most of the concessions which have been objectives in the recent automobile strikes in the United States.

"We are two generations ahead of the United States in labor legislation," said a ministry of labor official. Britain recognized unions as collective bargaining agents as far back as 1871—a concession just being made in some American industries.

More than one-third of the industrial workers of Great Britain—3,770,000 out of 11,000,000 in 1935—are members of trade unions.

Almost the only point on which British labor is less favorably situated than American labor is the absolute ban on stoppage of public services and the stern measures to prevent another general strike.

Also, unemployment relief is not generally paid to striking workers. The dole is paid only to a man out of work through no fault of his own. In practice, however, there are a few exceptions.

The British government possesses no powers of compulsory arbitration, but when disputes over wages, hours and working conditions come up the awards of government arbitrators usually are accepted. It seeks to prevent strikes ever starting. Conciliation offices are maintained in principal industrial centers, and these keep in constant touch with both employers and labor, seeking to iron out differences informally.

Fate of Trees, Design Muddle Memorial Issue

Fine Arts Commission is permissive, not mandatory, though that body is specifically directed to furnish aid if called upon. Also that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission is not even mentioned.

Chairman John J. Boylan, of the memorial commission, has pegged his defense of the selection of the Tidal Basin area for the monument on the McMillan commission's report of 1901, which recommended completion of the L'Enfant quintuplet plan.

The present Mall, you see, was envisaged by L'Enfant almost a century and a half ago as the east-west axis of a great cross whose base would be the Capitol. This cross would have five cardinal points, three of which have been provided for in 1901—the Capitol, the White House and Washington Monument. Later came the Lincoln Memorial, at the western tip of the Mall axis.

Assuming that L'Enfant's five-point scheme was irreproachable, yet it was conceived in 1791 for a city of 100,000 maximum population. Even the McMillan plan, prepared 110 years later to bring the French major up to date, was obsolete in most of its parts when the National Capital Park and Planning Commission was founded in 1926.

"The 1901 park plan was out of date," John Nolen, jr., the commission's director of planning, said last year in an address on the Capital's development. "Many of its important proposals were impossible of accomplishment by reason of urban development, which had been accelerated by the increase of population during and after the World War."

The commission of a generation ago, named for Senator McMillan, did its job when automobiles were still something to jeer at, a decade before the Japanese cherry trees with their lovely blossoms were set out.

Maj. L'Enfant and the McMillan Commissioners may have looked forward to some noble structure on the southern point of the Mall's cross-axis, but did they really have in mind another Pantheon which even disinterested officials concede will all but eclipse the Lincoln Memorial and draw the White House, at the other end of the see-saw, up into the air and leave it there?

At least one gentleman would answer in the negative.

"I have not changed my position one bit," he told The Post Saturday. "What I said before about the Tidal Basin site for the Jefferson Memorial still goes."

What, he said before was this, in part, as published in The Post last December 6:

"To erect the memorial there would mar the beauty of that portion of the city. I find nothing in the Tidal Basin plan that commends itself to me."

The speaker is Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, minority leader of the Senate, and a member of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission.

City Paralyzed By Half-Million Cherry Visitors

Biggest Traffic Jam in Capital's History Keeps Police Busy.

one of 37,085 that park police counted between 9 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. as they passed the inlet bridge at the Tidal Basin. Most of them were out of town. The policemen estimated that 65,000 viewed the cherry blossoms on foot. Then, assuming that the automobiles carried an average of four persons each, they struck on their estimated total of 213,000.

What couldn't be estimated was how many visitors delayed their journey into the park because of the traffic jam or because of the weather.

The sun played hide and seek with the crowds yesterday, coming out occasionally to caress them and the blossoms and then dodging behind the clouds. A sharp wind whipped in from the Potomac, causing the spectators to turn up their coat collars. There were brief snow and rain flurries.

As if to make up for this, the Weather Bureau announced last night that today and tomorrow will be "fair and warmer." Early this morning the thermometer may reach 30 degrees, it was forecast, but park officials don't believe this will injure the blooms.

Not only was Washington snarled, but almost the entire Eastern United States. Greyhound bus officials reported jams extending all the way from New York to Richmond.

Streets Are Clogged.

A score of extra police details were called out to handle the creeping floes which clogged Capital streets from 10 a. m. until 6 p. m., but their manipulations failed to hurry the snail-pace. Sixty United States Park Police were on duty in the Tidal Basin region, and all available policemen worked overtime in the city.

While streets were cleared of parked cars and many thoroughfares converted into emergency one-way streets for the day, and right and left-hand turns abolished, drivers nevertheless found it required twice and thrice the amount of time normally needed to make ordinary trips.

Inspector William Holmes of the Traffic Divison said "It was the biggest tie-up I've ever seen. We had the largest influx of out-of-town cars in history. Never in the history of the department have I seen such a jam on Fourteenth street. All day long it extended from the Tidal Basin to Rhode Island avenue in a solid mass."

At Fifteenth street and Massachusetts avenue one of the worst jams existed. One driver said it took him 22 minutes just to cross the intersection. There was no policeman on duty there at the time.

Another congested corner was at Pennsylvania avenue and Fourteenth street, where cars were packed ten abreast throughout most of the day. William E. Props, officer stationed there, said, "It's the worst mess I've seen in my 17 years on the force."

Travelers between Baltimore and Washington experienced long and tedious waits in solid blocks of automobiles between Laurel and Riverdale, and also between Hyattsville and Washington. Waits of a half-hour were common.

Taxicab drivers in the city, hopeful for the most profitable day of the year, when crowds in the Capital reach their peak, suffered a setback to their expectations, as they lost hours in jams which barely moved.

James Riley, Diamond cab driver, complained it took him 45 minutes to maneuver from Union Station to Dupont Circle, a trip he usually makes in less than 15 minutes. "It's been the same thing all day long," he said. "We never get a break. On New Year's Eve the streets were so slippery we couldn't move, and today, our second big day of the year, there are so many visitors here we can't move either."

Cars From Far Away.

Lack of understanding of local traffic rules added to the confusion of the thousands of out-of-town cars. Visitors' desire to do sightseeing en route to the cherry blossoms added to the trouble, as cars stopped or turned to give their occupants a chance to view monuments and public buildings.

During most of the afternoon a District of Columbia license could scarcely be found in the avalanche on Fourteenth street. Cars from Pennsylvania dominated the street, with Virginia licenses almost as thick. Tags denoting visitors from as far away as Saskatchewan were noted by Patrolman David Shaffner, who said, "Prosperity must be back, with so many people having time and money to just look at cherry trees."

Connecticut avenue was crippled as late as 6:30 in the evening, according to Cab Driver Arthur Jacobs, who said it took him more than an hour to move from the Washington Monument to Rhode Island avenue with two passengers from New York.

"These two ladies says to me," Jacobs said, "that they thought they knew something about traffic, coming from the Big Town, but they said they never saw anything like this."

It took two hours to drive around the Tidal Basin and an hour to get there from Pennsylvania avenue. By the height of the afternoon it was a bumper-to-bumper chain of cars on most of Washington's streets.

Bad jams at Dupont Circle, Thomas Circle and Scott Circle elicited dozens of calls to police headquarters for help. Police said that in many jams no one was able to move in any direction, and that as long as an hour was needed to untangle the messes.

Saturday had been one of the biggest days in the history of the traffic department, but it was nothing compared to Sunday. Visiting motorists started crowding into town by 6 a. m. One-way traffic was ordered in the Basin at 6:30. In the first hour it was in effect 8,500 cars, bearing the license plates of every State in the Union, had passed a given point. The first hour etsablished a record for volume, whch was later to increase with each passing hour.

While motorists worried about getting through jammed traffic lanes without scratching fenders, their brethren on foot spent a more leisurely afternoon enjoying the cherry blossoms.

There was plenty of room for pedestrian sightseers.

One lady from Missouri, who was sporting spring finery, said: "I see the cherry blossoms are all they are cracked up to be—but right now I am seeing more clearly my fur coat that is hanging in a closet at home."

The famous blooms, which arched the promenade around the Tidal Basin with an ethereal cloudbank of pink and white, were undoubtedly the main show. They were a source of wonder no end.

But amazing, too, was the graceful circling of the royal swan on which Queen Sakiko Saito had so triumphantly ridden Saturday night. The great white bird made its mysterious way from one bank to another, and happy was the sightseer who got the swan, the Washington Monument and a twig or two of blossoms in the range of his camera lens.

The swan rode quietly out over the waters, and the source of its motivation caused limitless guessing among the spectators. Only when the immense creature glided close to shore did its throbbing engines dispel the illusion of something heavenly.

The swan was still a big hit.

Its grace and splendor, however, did not thrill at least two men who stood alongside watching.

"Well," said the well-dressed one, "they're getting it down to a better system. You can't get relief any more without them looking into it. Apply for relief, and there'll be someone at your house to investigate right away. If you've got a car—it's no go."

"That's something," replied his friend. "You've got to say that."

The American Automobile Association, after a week-end of directing tourists in and around the Capital, declared last night the crowd was undeniably the city's greatest.

Inaugurations and other national events and celebrations have been as nothing. The closest approach was Cherry Blossom time in 1934, one A. A. A. official said.

Most frantic were the efforts of visitors to get lodging. With hotels and other hostelries filled up, tourists turned to the AAA for help.

More than 1,000 visitors asked the AAA for places to sleep Saturday night, and they kept the offices there open until after 3 a. m. Sunday morning.

Many Sleep in Cars.

At one tourist home, a weary landlady told AAA room scouts she had received 200 requests for accommodations since her house was filled early Saturday evening.

Requests for lodgings still were coming in last night, the AAA said, and about 6 p. m. an urgent appeal was sent to police to help locate beds for about 2,000 callers.

Parties searching for available rooms reported that literally hundreds of motorists had given up in despair, and, despite the near-freezing temperature, were sleeping in their cars around the Tidal Basin and on parking areas along the Potomac on Mount Vernon boulevard.

Even Turkish baths were crowded.

Telephone calls revealed that hotels and other lodgings in Baltimore, Frederick, Alexandria and Fredericksburg were as completely filled as those in the Capital.

Despite the overflow of traffic few accident reports came to police headquarters. Hundreds of fenders were dented, officers on duty said, but there were no injuries.

Miser Is Slain In Cellar Home In N. Y. Slums

Battered Body Is Found in Room Where He Hoarded Wealth.

By the United Press.

New York, April 11.—Benjamin Bucklazer, known to neighbors as "The Miser of the Lower East Side," was murdered today in the candle-lit cubbyhole where he lived, counted his cash and gloated over bank books showing $21,000 in deposits.

Relatives and friends had warned him repeatedly not to carry so much money, but Bucklazer never took their advice—not even when he was held up recently and robbed of $800.

He lived in a cellar room, 8 feet by 12, and had neither electric lights nor heat because he considered them a waste of money. Bucklazer was a coal and ice dealer, 59 years old, and a man who could have retired if he had not loved money so well.

Isidore Metzer, a neighbor, went into the cellar today to inquire why his coal had not been delivered. He found Bucklazer's body under shabby blankets on a cot. There was a hole over the right eye and the back of the skull was crushed.

Student's Shooting Is Puzzle to Police

When the boy did not appear, a maid was sent to awaken him. The maid discovered his bedroom empty and notified Dr. Burns, who rushed upstairs, found the bathroom door locked, and burst it in. At his feet lay the dead youth. The doctor at once summoned police.

Boy Happy, Says Father.

The father told Detective Jeremiah Flaherty there was no cause for suicide, that the boy was happy, busily engaged with his studies, had not been involved in a love affair, and had "every reason to live." The young man was a precocious student, having skipped a year in school at Western High, and ranking high in his studies at George Washington. The boy had two pet dogs, a large home, a roadster of his own, and every advantage, police were informed.

The death gun was a .38 caliber Army revolver belonging to the boy, according to relatives. The father informed police the gun belonged to him, not the son.

No note or hint at suicide had been given by the son, police ascertained.

Relatives were deeply concerned lest Mrs. Burns learn of the death of her son before arrival here. It was feared she might attempt suicide by leaping from a plane window, a cousin said. She was to be met at the boat this morning, hastened through customs by a special dispensation of the Customs Department and rushed to a waiting plane, all newspapers and messages being kept from her.

The dead youth was an expert handler of weapons, and had a target range rigged up in the cellar of his home. He was a marksman of considerable skill and spent much of his spare time practicing with his revolver, both at home and in the country. There were several guns and pistols in the house.

Farm Payments To Fight Erosion

By the Associated Press.

Directors of the Federal farm program said yesterday provisions this year will help control or prevent water or win erosion on several million farms.

H. R. Tolley, agricultural adjustment administrator, said the 1937 benefit payment program included "specific steps to combat erosion in all regions by tested methods." These methods, developed by the Federal Soil Conservation Service and State agricultural colleges, have been worked into regional and State AAA plans, he said.

Tolley said farmers could earn payments in all regions by shifting acreage from soil-depleting crops to grasses and legumes, "which, in addition to improving fertility, bind the soil and increase its water-holding capacity, and thus check erosion."

'Baby Carriage' Firebug Claims Two More Lives

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 11.—The "baby carriage" firebug, blamed for more than 50 fires and 2 deaths, was credited with striking again early today in a Bronx tenement fire which caused 2 deaths and sent 2 others to hospitals with serious injuries.

Fire Marshal Thomas P. Brophy said the fire started in a baby carriage in a ground-floor hallway. Another fire, started the same way a few blocks away, was discovered 45 minutes later and extinguished before much damage was done.

It was the first time the "baby carriage" firebug had struck since last December, when he stopped suddenly after successfully eluding for months special police details which sought to trap him.

The police were convinced that the same man was responsible for the series of incendiary fires which occurred in the Bronx because they were all set in the same way—in baby carriages left in hallways by tenants.

Fearing another outbreak, police officials today instructed all radio cars and foot patrolmen in the borought to be on the watch for the firebug.

The dead in this morning's fire were Morro Bressetti, 47, and his 8-year-old daughter, Celia. They were suffocated in bed in their third-floor flat.

Yolanda Bressetti, 33, wife of Morro, and Oriano Bressetti, 10, another daughter, were injured when they jumped from a window into outstretched overcoats held by passersby.

Eight members of another family escaped from their second-floor flat unhurt. The six children, ranging from 5 to 17 years of age, were rescued by three men who formed a human ladder by standing on one another's shoulders and handed them down to safety. The parents hung from the window ledge and dropped to the ground.

Rev. Walter Coe Rites Set Today

The Rev. Walter Peyton Coe, 77, father of Conway P. Coe, United States Commissioner of Patents, died Saturday at the home of his son, Allen C. Coe, of Glebe road, Arlington County, Va. Mr. Coe was a retired minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Services will be held at 2 p. m. today at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South, Ninth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Mr. Coe was educated at Washington and Lee University and Randolph-Macon College. He was admitted to the ministry in 1879 and served various churches in nearby Maryland and Virginia for 40 years, retiring in 1919.

The minister was married to Miss Ada Ball Prigg, of this city, in 1885. He celebrated his fiftieth wedding anniversary two years ago. Survivors are the wife and five children, Allen C. and Conway P. Coe; the Rev. Edward G. Coe, of Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. A. L. Ely, of Akron, Ohio, and Mrs. J. Emerson Powell, of Falls Church, Va.

Lawyers to Seek Retreat Members

A Communion breakfast for members of the lawyers' group of the Washington Laymen's Retreat League was announced for May 2 yesterday, after a meeting of the organization Saturday in the Press Club.

The laymen will assemble for a religious service the morning of the breakfast in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception at Catholic University, according to Camden McAtee, chairman of arrangements. The men will be served breakfast afterward in the University refectory.

Al. Philip Pane, of Georgetown University, announced plans for a city-wide membership drive, and named 15 captains to head the campaign. Efforts will be made, he said, to classify lawyers in both Government and civil practice.

Ordered to Fire on Rebels If Necessary

said. "We think that is far away. But we're only kidding ourselves, for right down in Mexico is located the focal point for Communist activities in America."

Unless something is done immediately in the way of an educational program to protect the people of the country against communism, "we will fall, too," Carmody said.

Sit-Downers Imported.

"Look at Michigan now," he said. "Strikes were called at Flint. The militia was brought in. I talked with men on the 'inside' of negotiations and they told me the strike was not promoted by employes of General Motors Corporation. The sit-downers, I was told, were not regular employes, but were brought from Toledo.

"We may say it's a strike, but we're kidding ourselves. It's breeding with communism.

"These strikes," he said, "are supported by the Communist program."

The movement to defeat communism will be promoted vigorously by the K. of C. throughout the country, Carmody said. "We ask all interested citizens to join us."

A society of "technical assistance to Spanish democracy" has been organized in Pennsylvania and in nearby States, Carmody said. Raising money "under the guise for Spain's distressed," it "really is sending Americans to Spain to fight for the Loyalist cause—which is a Communist cause."

"By their philosophy of hate and absolutism," Carmody said, "the Communists would destroy initiative and penalize ability, disorganize labor and industry, discourage thrift and frugality, despoil the sanctity of the home and family, discredit man's ability to direct his own affairs, and would in the end regiment him into bondage under a dictatorship."

Pope Takes First Ride In Auto Since Illness

Vatican City, April 11 (AP).—Pope Pius, recovernig from serious illness, today took his first automobile ride in six months, making the circuit of the Vatican gardens several times. It was the first time he had been in the gardens since he was gravely stricken last December 5.

Before his ride the Holy Father received 400 workers employed by the Vatican who appeared before him in their working clothes. To them the Pope said: "We are sure that the echo of our encyclical against communism (published March 18) has reached the working men. We urge you to do your duty in a Christian manner."

British Will Fire Upon Rebels If Needed to Protect Ships or foreign, that tries to deliver food or other materials to the loyalist city.

Rebels Defy Britain.

St. Jean De Luz, France, April 11 (AP).—Diplomatic sources tonight disclosed a Spanish insurgent warning to Great Britain that insurgent warships had been instructed to fire on British freighters if they attempt to enter the Basque port of Bilbao.

They said Gen. Franco, insurgent commander in chief, in a note to Sir Henry Chilton, British ambassador to Spain, declared the presence of British warships as convoys for food-laden freighters would make no difference.

"Under no circumstances will nationalist (insurgent) warships allow the breaking of the Bilbao blockade," they said the note read.

"We are prepared to risk an international incident, but the ships will not get through."

Six British freighters bound for Bilbao were in port here.

The sixth to arrive was the Seven Seas Spray, bound for the Basque port from Alicante with a cargo of merchandise.

Her captain reported he was stopped off Santander by the insurgent cruiser Almirante Cervera, forbidden to enter Bilbao and convoyed past the port.

The captain declared, however, he alreday had received a message from the British destroyer Blanche, which broadcast word to British ships to go to St. Jean de Luz until further orders.

The British freighter MacGregor, bound for Bilbao, entered the port of Bayonne to await orders.

Earlier, the freighter Seven Seas Trader returned to port here after an insurgent warship threatened to sink her if she ventured close to Bilbao.

Gen. Franco previously had notified the captains of the other four freighters that his warships would fire on them rather than let them unload cargoes at Bilbao.

Diplomats here took a serious view of the dispatch of the world's largest naval vessel, the Hood, to these waters from Gibraltar. The British 10,000-ton cruiser Shropshire already has arrived here from that stronghold.

Destroyers Ready.

Two British destroyers are stripped for action and watching the insurgent cruiser Almirante Cervera, which turned back a British freighter trying to enter Bilbao on April 7.

Four British destroyers now are based at St. Jean de Luz to watch the Bay of Biscay situation, and reports have been received that other destroyers are held in readiness at Gibraltar.

Diplomats said it was "conceivable" that Gen. Franco will order his warships to fire on British freighters in spite of the presence of the Hood and other men-of-war, preferring to create an international incident rather than permit food to reach the Basques while his armies are engaged in what may prove to be the decisive campaign of the war.

The insurgent land forces have been thrusting toward Bilbao for the last week.

Diplomatic circles said the insurgent generalissimo already has published a "warning" to the British admiralty in which he said:

"Nationalist Spain is losing little by little her respect and consideration for the British flag."

Insurgents have charged the British flag has been used to shield Spanish government ships.

The German pocket battleship Graf von Spee is cruising off Bilbao, and Basque authorities have accused her of assisting the insurgents' blockade.

Food cargoes do not come under the prohibited list of the 27-nation international committee for isolating the Spanish civil war, but Franco has announced that he will consider the dispatch of food to his enemies "an act of war" against him.

Diplomats pointed out, however, that neither Britain nor France has recognized the government or the insurgents as belligerents in the meaning of international law and, therefore, neither recognizes the right of either Spanish party to establish a blockade.

NYA Battles Tenancy by Drive To Teach Good Farming Early

Facing possible frustration at the hands of Congress of its original designs for betterment of the tenant farmers' lot, the Administration has turned to catching the young idea before it becomes a tenant and to bring it "the rudiments of a successful farm life," it became known yesterday.

The new effort was revealed in an announcement by Aubrey Williams, director of the National Youth Administration, that three months' instruction in "work-and-learn" projects will be made available by the NYA, the Agriculture Department and State agricultural schools and colleges.

Agricultural courses for the boys and home-making training for the girls are to be included, practical instruction in each to be given while the students are working out their subsistence projects on school or other property. Building of workshops and co-operative dormitories for themselves and their successor students will be among these projects in many instances.

Discussing the plan, Williams said yesterday:

"Thousands of farm families, particularly in the South, have lived for generations in conditions of unspeakable ignorance and poverty. They are born, mature, and die without ever knowing any of the advantages of modern civilization or attaining a decent standard of living. Their children of the present generation face a similar fate unless some means are taken to help them.

"In this program it is our purpose to make available to them in simplified form such elementary principles of farming and home-making as are commonly taught in our regular agricultural schools and colleges. It is not an attempt to impart a full education, but rather to give them practical demonstrations of some of the basic techniques without which they can scarcely hope to rise above their present level of existence."

Young people will be selected on the basis of eligibility for NYA employment and their ability to profit by the type of training which they will receive, Williams added. In co-operation with the various agricultural institutions, they will be assigned in groups as special students with courses of study adapted to their particular needs and educational levels. Their tuition, subsistence, and other costs will be worked out on projects consuming approximately one-half time with allowance made for monthly cash payments of $5 each. Enrollment terms will vary between one and three months, depending upon the type of program developed in each locality.

Foreign Trade Is Expected to Set 7-Year High

U. S. Purchases Abroad May Exceed Exports First Time in 50 Years.

By the Associated Press.

Commerce Department reports indicated yesterday the Nation's purchases abroad may exceed sales this year for the first time in almost half a century.

Officials predicted, however, that aggregate two-way trade will increase about $750,000,000 over last year, pushing merchandise transactions with other countries to the highest level in seven years.

For the first two months of this year, imports have exceeded exports by $63,826,000. In the same period last year, traders chalked up a slight excess of exports.

Officials said it is too early to determine whether the country's traditional export balance will be wiped out this year, but added this was a possibility.

During 1936, this excess of sales over purchases dropped to the lowest point since 1893, exports topping imports by only $34,258,000. This compared with $235,389,000 in 1935.

Analyzing 1936 foreign trade, a department report said the export balance was whittled by increasing purchasing power in the United States, the drought and higher prices of foreign goods.

The survey said it "would be exceedingly difficult" to determine what effect the reciprocal trade agreements had on the export balance. It added, however, that this probably was small compared with other factors.

Exports to all countries rose 8 per cent during the year, while shipments to countries with which trade agreements had been reached rose 14 per cent. All imports rose 18 per cent and imports from trade agreement countries climbed 22 per cent.

Two-way trade with Latin American countries generally was shown to have climbed more rapidly than the country's world trade.

At $972,576,000, total imports and exports for the first two months of 1937 were $211,733,000 over the same period last year.

Ernest G. Draper, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, estimated that two-way trade would increase $750,000,000 for the entire year to about $5,600,000,000. This would be 15 per cent over last year, but 19 per cent under 1930 and 41 per cent under 1929.

Court Change Backer Wins Texas Election

Austin, Tex., April 11 (AP).—Lyndon B. Johnson, 29-year-old defender of the Supreme Court reorganization plan who bested seven opponents for the Tenth Texas District Congressional seat, prepared today to throw his support to President Roosevelt's program.

Johnson swept to a decisive victory yesterday in the special election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of James P. Buchanan, chairman of the House of Representatives Appropriation Committee. Two of his opponents opposed the court plan, one of them emphatically, and Johnson expressed an opinion their defeat was a vote of confidence for the President.

H. S. Wilkinson, Crucible Steel's Chairman, Dies

Succumbs in Chicago Hotel While on Way East From Vacation.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 11.—Horace S. Wilkinson, chairman of the board of the Crucible Steel Corporation, died early today in a downtown hotel following a few days of illness. Accompanied by his wife, he came here about a week ago. His body will be sent to Greenwich, Conn., tomorrow.

Wilkinson, industrialist, financier and Great Lakes shipping operator, who died while returning from a winter vacation in Phoenix, Ariz., began his career as a penniless real estate dealer in Syracuse, N. Y.

Born 68 years ago in Shellsburg, Iowa, the son of a Methodist minister, Wilkinson attended the public schools there and went east in the 90's to seek his fortune. After a brief period in the real estate business, he developed the Great Lakes Steamship Co., of which he became president, and founded the Toledo Shipbuilding Co., of which he was chairman at the time of his death.

Early in the 1900's he became one of the prime organizers of the Crucible Steel Co. of America, now one of the six largest in the country. In developing the Crucible process he was credited with helping to defeat an effort by the Krupp interests of Germany to gain world dominance in the steel industry.

Wilkinson ventured twice into politics, first as an ardent supporter of his friend, Theodore Roosevelt, during the Bull Moose movement of 1912, and later as sponsor of Nathan L. Miller for the governorship, in 1920.

In 1919 he succeeded Herbert Dupuy as chairman of the Crucible Steel Co. and went to New York after a quarter century residence in Syracuse, N. Y.

Of late he had maintained living quarters in a New York hotel as well as at Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn.

He was director and honorary vice president of the American Iron and Steel Institute and a trustee of Syracuse University.

The Goodwill Industries.

With the problem of unemployed "employables" fully in mind, Washington will be asked beginning this morning to consider its employed "unemployables." The Goodwill Industries of Washington today opens a campaign to raise funds, the second of its career.

In 1935, after three years of investigation, a group of public spirited citizens agreed to dedicate themselves to the assistance of the aged, handicapped and crippled of the city. Impressed by the success of the Goodwill Industries plan, which started in Boston in 1904 and has since spread to more than 100 cities in this country and abroad, they raised $15,000 by public solicitation and introduced the idea to Washington.

The start was in a one-room shop to which old clothes, worn shoes, broken furniture and other discarded household furnishings were taken to be refurbished by competent but impoverished persons. The enterprise soon expanded greatly after the donation of a building at 1214 New Hampshire avenue northwest. Where only a few persons could be employed before, it now has become possible to give daily work to 60 handicapped men and women and part-time employment to 291. Wages, totaling $31,400 in 18 months, have come from sales of the renovized articles to needy persons.

Funds now are needed to operate the trucks which collect discarded goods from 11,000 families in the Washington area; for the budget and promotion program; for repair materials, store rentals, and the salary of a director, the only paid administrator. This will amount to $22,000. In addition, $43,000 is sought for equipment of the main building so that the daily work list can be expanded from 100 to 150 persons; and for the purchase of additional properties necessary for the efficient and economic development of the Goodwill's services.

The amount sought will not appear large if citizens realize that for every dollar contributed for operating expenses, an average of three dollars is paid out in wages. Perhaps more persuasive is the fact that contributions to the Goodwill Industries mean employment and through it self-respect to many carefully certified persons who might otherwise be faced by destitution.

The Effect Of Rumor.

The mere rumor that the Treasury might be preparing to reduce the price of gold to check domestic commodity price rises and halt an unwanted gold inflow has created extensive disturbances in the foreign exchange markets. Among the results are declines in stock and commodity quotations in many countries.

The events of the past week have demonstrated the precarious stability of the dollar so long as its value in terms of gold is not finally and definitely fixed. Of course, the dollar could not be formally revalued upward without resort to new legislation. However, under existing conditions, dollar values are best determined in terms of sterling and francs—the leading world currencies for which our money is exchanged. Measured by such standards, the dollar rose decidedly in exchange value as a result of the rumored reduction in gold buying prices. Or, otherwise expressed, the dollar value of pounds and francs dropped sharply.

The widespread disturbances resulting from an unsubstantiated rumor are only a mild foretaste of the major upsets that would doubtless follow renewed tampering with the gold value of the dollar. So the disconcerting events of the past week will have served a useful purpose if they impress upon the Administration the dangers of further monetary experimentation.

When the dollar was devalued, the subsequent advance in prices was erratic and irregular. There was no evidence of a uniform increase in prices corresponding to the decline in the gold value of the dollar. Moreover, the undervaluation of the dollar attracted abnormally large amounts of gold to this country. That inflow still continues, for various reasons, and is creating a serious problem of internal credit control for the Treasury.

In short, we are now experiencing some of the unexpected and undesirable effects of past efforts at currency management designed to lift the price level. Reversing the policy of raising gold prices by lowering gold prices and increasing the exchange value of the dollar would not solve the problems created by past mistakes. It would simply result in new kinds of maladjustments equally unwelcome and wholly undesirable.

Our experience has conspicuously demonstrated the defects of a managed currency and proved the superiority of a money of fixed value based on gold. Until world conditions permit of a return to a really stable system of world currencies, based on a modified gold standard, a certain amount of currency management is obviously unavoidable.

That, however, does not mean that we should arbitrarily raise the gold value of the dollar in a bungling endeavor to counteract some of the undesirable consequences of an earlier arbitrary reduction in its gold value.

Good Advice On Housing.

Washington is one of the very few American cities in which genuine slum reclamation programs are going forward. In studying the Wagner housing bill, therefore, Congress will doubtless turn to the local Alley Dwelling Authority for advice as well as a full account of its activities. Both houses will want to know how this local experiment is working out before attempting to formulate a national slum reclamation policy to be operated through municipal units.

The Washington Housing Association has already urged Senate and House committees to bring the Wagner bill more closely into line with the principles followed by the A. D. A. As the bill now stands it would permit the conversion of slum areas into low-rent housing districts or parks. But much of the land now occupied by disease-infested hovels is suitable for neither purpose. The most reasonable policy, as the housing association points out, is to authorize the development of such land "for any use, public or private, that will serve the interest of the community or the neighborhood."

This constructive suggestion emphasizes one of the weakest points of the Wagner bill. Its chief aim is the construction of low-cost houses. Such projects might replace slums. But since there is nothing in the bill to require even the clearance of blighted areas, it is reasonable to assume that most cities would follow the easier course of building new projects on undeveloped land and leaving the slums for later consideration.

If this measure is to serve the great social purpose of "eliminating unsafe and insanitary housing conditions," therefore, it must be aimed more directly at the slums. The local housing association points out that slum reclamation, as undertaken by the Alley Dwelling Authority, has the special advantage of wiping out squalid areas whether or not new dwellings are needed.

Another important amendment suggested is the reduction of the period for which annual housing grants could be made from 60 to 40 years. There is no certainty that houses designed and built for low-income groups will retain their usefulness over three-fifths of a century. Moreover, the association would restrict the issuance of obligations by the proposed housing authority to $250,000,000, as compared with $1,000,000,000 in the Wagner bill. That arrangement would require the authority to seek a further authorization from Congress when need might arise.

Still more significant is the recommendation that grants be made on a "per room basis, with definite standards of minimum room sizes." As the bill now stands annual subsidies for low-cost housing projects would be granted as a percentage of acquisition or construction costs. That would encourage extravagance. A maximum grant of $2 to $3 per room per month, the association believes, would result in a lowering of costs and would help keep rentals at a minimum.

It is evident from this and various other studies of the Wagner bill that it will have to be drastically amended before it can be regarded as a sound approach to the slum reclamation and public housing problems. At present it is largely designed to pour Federal money into low-cost home construction. The status of the Treasury as well as sociological interests call for more direct concentration of the attack upon the slums.

Baldwin's Wise Counsel.

Stanley Baldwin's retirement to private life sometime after the coronation has been freely predicted during recent months. Now these rumors have received confirmation from the lips of the British Prime Minister himself. In an address to his constituents in Bewdley, Worcestershire, Mr. Baldwin declared that his exit from the political stage is not far off.

"It is far better to go," he said, "when the people may still think of you as perhaps not incompetent than to stay until perhaps they know before you do that you are becoming incompetent."

This is sound common sense. Mr. Baldwin is on the verge of his seventieth birthday. The years which have added to his experience have witnessed no diminution of his powers. Never a genius as a statesman, he nevertheless displayed during the recent abdication crisis vigor and ability of which many a younger man might well be proud.

A more egotistical individual than the present prime minister might easily take the position, and with justice, that he still has many active years remaining to him. Men far older than Mr. Baldwin—Gladstone is but one example—have performed the exacting duties of the premiership with distinction.

Yet Mr. Baldwin is eminently right in resisting the temptation to stay on. All too many men have dimmed the luster of their earlier eminence by not realizing when their time was up. What holds true of eating holds true of public office as well: the wise man rises from the table still a little hungry.

Doctors Diagnose Medicine.

If it can not always heal itself, at least the medical profession can diagnose its ills. This is amply demonstrated in a monumental report published recently as one of the studies of the American Foundation, established by Edward Bok. It summarizes the views of 2,100 leading physicians and surgeons on the present condition of medicine in this country. In particular, they weigh the question of how "adequate" medical care can be extended to the large part of the Nation now lacking it.

The report shows considerable agreement that "so much remains to be done by way of improving medical care and the personnel of the medical profession (that) discussion of cost and distribution (is) only superficial." Better medical education is the most common remedy prescribed for this condition. Not superscientists but competent clinicians, twentieth century adaptations of the fast vanishing family doctor type, should be the schools' aim, it is commonly held.

In addition, strong words were written by the doctors of "the ill-qualified and self-nominated specialist," of "the surgeon who achieves his competence—if he does achieve it—at the expense of the public" and of "the incompetent obstetrician (with his) overuse of the Caesarean section." If the public had not already vaguely sensed these shortcomings of the profession, a widespread uneasiness might be expected to result from these remarks. As it is, the very fact that the leaders confess readily to the deficiencies of the profession gives reassuring hope for their early improvement.

Of more direct concern to the public is the discussion of the availability of medical care. The report shows, that in New Mexico, for example, a third of the fatally sick die unattended by a physician. Three principal reasons for this neglect are cited: the high cost of diagnosis and treatment; the distance between many agricultural homes and medical offices; the public's ignorant trust in quacks and cults.

Group practice is proposed as one way of reducing costs. Plainly, overhead expenses could be cut appreciably if the doctors of a community banded together. Another approach to the same problem is suggested through voluntary health insurance.

A third idea, drawing an increasing amount of support, is that commonly summarized as "socialized medicine." One school of thought among doctors, emphasizing the close relation between public and private health, sees complete Government control over the provision of medical care as the only hope for extending the benefits of modern medical science to the entire country. Another group notes a universal trend toward governmental supervision in other fields and believes state direction of medical aid logical, and inevitable in greater or less degree.

The arguments against State medicine, however, are many and compelling. And the final decision rests not with the doctors alone but with the public. For this reason, a second report contemplated by the American Foundation will be eagerly awaited. As planned, it will make similar inquiry into the problem of medical care, but from the viewpoint of nonmedical persons, especially social scientists, economists and Government administrators.

Optimistic.

It would be perfectly easy for any earnest debater to prove that men are both more sentimental and more practical than women. It would be just as easy to prove that women are at once more practical and more sentimental than men. But there is no room for debate in the declaration that more married women than married men remember their wedding anniversaries when they come around.

And that's quite all right, bless the ladies. Indeed it's very nice of them. And if they want to celebrate in some way, say by giving friend husband his favorite dish for breakfast and dinner, why, that would be all right, too. But do they do this? On the contrary, it's part of the game to assume that men should do all the treating. And it is also part of the game that the husbands, among whom are to be found some of the champion forgetters of the universe, shall not be reminded of their remissness until it is too late to provide a remedy. This, as every woman knows, will make a man feel like a worm, even though not a word be said.

Men everywhere, therefore, will hail with delight the action taken by the Optimist Club of Los Angeles and should hasten to follow, in all their many pathetic organizations, a most illustrious example. All members of the Optimist Club of L. A. receive a three-day advance notice of their wedding anniversaries. In this way the poor fish know exactly what they have to do, and when.

"Philadelphia authorities think thieves who are stealing manhole covers all over the city may be selling them for scrap iron."—Press report. Tut, tut; perhaps they're playing checkers with them.

Isn't it about time for somebody to pull off a good old-fashioned ax murder?

Cause Of Secession.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The one-sided view taken regarding the Civil War of 1861-65, by some Southern writers to The Post, is more amusing than instructive. Such writers might do well to take time in searching carefully into the causes which led up to that conflict. Let them read the fiery debates in Congress prior to the setting up of the Southern Confederacy, and note, as well, the acts of Southern officials in the weak-kneed Buchanan administration. History has well recorded the facts, which no amount of fallacious reasoning can gainsay.

The movement behind secession was the preservation of the atrocious institution of chattel slavery. Southern leaders of that period were obsessed with the idea that the North would not fight. How woefully mistaken! The late Gen. John A. Logan, in his volume on the Civil War, entitled "The Great Conspiracy; Its Origin and History," furnishes ample proof as to the beginning and progress of the conspiracy to disrupt the Union.

But the cause of secession is a lost cause, never to be resurrected. Gen. Lee was well aware of this when he made his farewell address to his soldiers. All forward-looking people of the South are heeding the general's advice. Those who persist in remaining "unreconstructed rebels" would far better fall into line and join patriotic Americans throughout the land in defending our country from insidious influences that would use our free institutions to serve their own ends.

Community Chest And Y. M. C. A.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Two letters, one criticizing payment of Community Chest funds to the Y. M. C. A., and one criticizing Community Chest support of character building agencies in general, appeared in the "Letters to the Editor" column of The Post of April 8. They are signed by "Fred Vetter" and "A Housewife." Another letter, criticizing the Y. M. C. A. and its receipt of Chest funds, signed by "William A. Brown" appeared in your issue of April 5.

The writers, particularly "A Housewife," appear to be uninformed in regard to the organization of the Community Chest. The Community Chest is not a welfare agency with branches, which it can close at will. It is a federation of 65 autonomous organizations banded together to raise, in one campaign, funds formerly raised in 65 different campaigns. It not only provides new economies in the collection and administration of welfare funds, but it also saves the contributor from being harassed by multiple solicitations, while releasing the heads of the welfare organizations for the tasks for which their agencies were formed.

All the agencies named by "A Housewife" including the Y. M. C. A. to which Mr. Brown and Mr. Vetter refer, were receiving their support from the public long before the Chest was organized. Each has its own interested group of supporters and these supporters would continue to give to these organizations were the Chest dissolved tomorrow, or were such agencies to resign from the Chest and put on separate competitive appeals.

A budget committee, composed of 25 leading Washington contributors who give their time (and lots of it) without pay, decides the amount of funds that each agency shall receive. It carefully studies the budgeted needs of each organization and allocates the money received in proportion to the necessary work to be accomplished. Many persons are not aware that the Y. M. C. A. receives from dues, memberships, etc., 91 per cent of its budget, and that the 9 per cent contributed by the Community Chest pays for services to people who cannot pay the full cost.

"Housewife" is also apparently uninformed of the new program inaugurated by the Council of Social Agencies for the blind of the District, for which Chest funds are allocated. This program has been carefully worked out by experts in the field of caring for the blind and promises to give much more adequate care to these people than has been possible in the past. Its budget is actually larger than was the budget for work for the blind last year.

Since 1933, the question of actual relief for the destitute has been a governmental responsibility and has been assumed, as such, by the Federal and District governments. This does not mean that no Chest money goes for relief. Family agencies of the Chest have hundreds of destitute or underpaid families on their rolls. The object of these family agencies is to do more than grant temporary relief. They strive to rehabilitate such families, enabling them to develop their own resources so as to become self-supporting members of society again.

Boys Clubs, Girl Scouts, the 4-Y's, Settlements and other agencies affiliated with the Chest are doing a very necessary preventive work, keeping boys and girls from the street gangs and their consequences, building up morale among discouraged, disheartened families, and otherwise rounding out a welfare program which benefits the entire City of Washington. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

We recognize the fact that it is very hard for citizens not closely connected with the problems of destitution, health, delinquency, broken morale, old age and unprotected childhood, to understand the activities of 65 organizations in the federation known as the Community Chest, and to see how they all fit into the community needs. We know that comparatively few people are interested in all the various types of services. So we are always happy to answer questions or to discuss the reasons why money given through the Chest is budgeted as it is.

HERBERT L. WILLETT, Jr.,
Director Community Chest.
Washington, April 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was interested in the suggestion of your correspondent, Mr. William A. Brown, that the Y. M. C. A. give its Community Chest funds to the unemployed, because I believe that suggestion represents a widespread feeling among unthinking people today. The Y. M. C. A. is a character-building organization and we seem to live in an era when too little emphasis is placed upon character or character-building. Among high officials of the Government and among humble recipients of "relief," we find misrepresentation, distortion of the truth, subterfuge and an appalling lack of integrity. If we had more character in politics, we would have had less politics in "relief" and, in 1937, less need for "relief." I believe that the unemployed should be fed, housed and clothed until such time as they can be absorbed by private industry, but I do not believe it should be done at the sacrifice of character-building organizations.

As for Mr. Brown's personal experience with the Y. M. C. A., it is in absolute contradiction to my own experience and that of most of the men I have known who have sought and received help from the Y. M. C. A. Perhaps Mr. Brown's three university degrees and sufficient money to enable him to pay his rent regularly, as he says, may have made the "Y" authorities feel that his case was less urgent than some others. I grew up in an Ohio industrial town. When I was 18 years old I belonged to the toughest gang of hoodlums in town and reform school was only a few weeks ahead of us. I was often cold and hungry, but neither a hand-out nor regular support by a "relief" organization would have helped me then. When the town got too "hot" for me, I hopped a freight for Pittsburgh and stumbled, by chance into one of the 14 or more branches of the great Pittsburgh Y. M. C. A. From that night on, for five years, the Pittsburgh "Y" was father, mother, home and school to me. They got me a temporary job, taught me a trade and then helped me to get a better job. Unlike Mr. Brown, I didn't have three university degrees and there were many times when I couldn't pay my rent regularly. But the "Y" stood behind me. That was 12 years ago. Today, I am a fairly useful citizen of my community and any good I have been able to do and any personal success I have attained I owe directly to the Y. M. C. A. There are thousands upon thousands of men in the country today who are similarly indebted to the "Y." Give more money to the Y. M. C. A. and to the other character-building organizations and you'll have less delinquency in Washington and, in the end, less need for "relief."

In the whole history of this country there has never been a greater need for character. R. B. S.
Pittsburgh, Pa., April 5.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like enthusiastically and wholeheartedly to second the very good letter of Mr. Fred Vetter appearing in today's Post regarding the Y. M. C. A.

Frankly, ever since the late European unpleasantness in which our country was embroiled, I have looked with that good old askance at the "Y."

Why not let some sunlight in on the situation? It might be good for the organization itself.

F. G. YOUNG.

A Confederate Daughter.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent in The Post of April 7, Mr. H. S. Wilson, indorses the vitriolic views of Mr. Tom McCall. Both gentlemen by the intensity of their expressions show all too plainly that they, for two, have not forgotten the Civil War. Nor will they, as long as they nourish smoldering grudges. Speaking as the granddaughter of two Confederate soldiers and as the daughter of the editor and founder of the Confederate Veterans Magazine, I state with honesty and sincerity that I believe there is less hate, animosity and biased views in the South than has existed or continues to exist in the minds of our Northern opponents.

Mr. McCall and Mr. Wilson seemingly forget that the South was the invaded country, defending with almost superhuman efforts the onslaughts of overwhelming numbers in blue, and that it is the invaded on whom is inflicted the most diabolic of the machinations of war. The Civil War was too great in scope and effect to be forgotten, but there is no reason why remembering should be synonymous with hating. It is true that stories of indignities suffered during this period of American history have been handed down from parent to child; yet sectional hatred should not be engendered in the telling; rather, it should act as a palliative. The Southerner, loving and forever remembering this great moment in his history, can view with indulgence such tirades as those of Mr. Wilson and Mr. McCall, who seem stricken with acute pain at the thought of the Lee and Jackson stamps.

If they were more American and less Northern, they would see that these two men are being honored as two great American generals—the only two our country has produced who are recognized and honored in England and other foreign countries. Stonewall Jackson was a military genius who handled cavalry as no one except Napoleon has ever handled it and whose Valley Campaign stands unequaled and incomparable in the annals of war.

Honor to whom honor is due, is an old maxim, and is applicable, I believe, to this question. One marvels that they have gone unhonored for 70 years in the minds of all real Americans.

MRS. A. L. HAVRON HARRISON.
Washington, April 6.

The South Is Losing Money

Extracts from an article by David Cushman Coyle in the Virginia Quarterly Review.

THE South is losing money. The editor of a leading Southern newspaper makes a rough guess that the South is paying out a billion dollars a year beyond its yearly income. Where does it get the billion dollars? By selling its property to investors in other parts of the country, by borrowing money and going bankrupt, by destroying land and forest to make products for sale.

The South is losing resources, physical and human. Forests are cut and not replanted. Coal and iron ore mined and the steel is shipped away for others to use. The land is being washed into the sea. The people are being allowed to suffer poor health and poor education, which robs them of part of their productive powers.

These unpleasant developments, which so deeply concern the leaders of the South, are involved in the problem of economic unbalance which concerns the leaders of the Nation. Not only is the South as a whole spending more than its income, most of its local units are running a local deficit. And any geographic unit that is spending more than its income is in a perilous condition.

The causes of this economic drain can be found, for oratorical purposes, in the evil days of reconstruction. But in hunting for a remedy, we may as well recognize that the evil of economic drain is found in many parts of the North and West. It has various causes, many connected with the difference between agriculture and industry. Any remedy that will help the South will be likely to help the depressed areas in all parts of the country.

A healthy economy would be one where any tendency to unbalance would generate balancing forces that would help the losers and restore the balance. A self-balancing system cannot be found in economic forces alone; it must be looked for in a combination of economics and governmental policy.

If national subsidies are seen to be necessary, they will be paid out of income taxes collected in New York, in California, in Florida—wherever the men live who are now receiving the tribute from the poorer sections of the country. These subsidies are not a charity to pauper States, but a return of excessive payments, like the "dividends" returned to members of a co-operative store. Both the taxpayer and the recipient of the subsidy will think more clearly if they keep this basic fact in mind.

What are "excessive" payments? They are payments that throw the Nation into distress and so reduce the total national income. The drain of money from the South is not a benefit to the North but a damage. Year by year, the North loses a part of the value of its Southern market. Year by year, the few powerful economic rulers in the financial centers accumulate this tribute-money and use it to intrench themselves in power. But even the financial lords themselves are not benefited by concentrated power. When the day of reckoning comes, as it came in 1929, the system on which their fortunes and lives depend is shaken.

The fact is that, so long as subsidies are necessary to prevent economic unbalance, the cost of subsidy is the cost of stability—and stability is worth the price.

Moral theories are sometimes misleading. If we are going to be squeamish about helping the "unworthy," we ought in fairness to go back several generations and find out just whose fault it was that these people were allowed to become "unworthy." That, however, is impossible. Justice is not for mortal man to understand. A more practical attitude is to regard the final result, a generation or two hence.

Good, stout, efficient—and patriotic—workers can be produced by good food, good schools, economic security and generous treatment. The fact that their parents may not have "deserved" such advantages will be forgotten in 30 years or so. What we want is a strong Nation made up of strong States, each capable of holding its place in a fast moving world.

The general problem, then, from the national point of view, is to establish means of redistribution that will stop the present drain of money out of depressed areas in all sections of the country. No improvement can be expected unless the means of redistribution become stronger than the forces of unbalance.

The economic deficit of the South is one part of the great national maladjustment that comes from a wrong distribution of income. Until the national income in general can be redistributed by Government action, no local remedy will cure the South.

First of all, then, must come a national policy of income taxation and subsidy that will work powerfully against the unbalancing forces of a commercial system that is controlled by high finance. But a successful national policy is not enough. A successful national policy will mean opportunity, at last, after all these years of a situation without remedy. But opportunity carries no man on a stretcher to the peaks of success. He must storm the breach on his own legs and at his own risk.

If we Americans can break the deadening power of high finance in our country, we shall breach the power that has held the South confined. Then, if Southerners have not lost their vitality, they can get up and capture their own land of plenty. It is no easy job for the American people or the Southern people. But it is worth the price.

Counter-Irritants.

That eighty-three-year-old grocer from South Portland, Maine, who has been feted in New York for his record of seventy-three years of selling foodstuffs over one counter can afford to be nostalgic for the good old days, when store patrons and loungers helped themselves from the open cracker barrel, without actually longing for their return. After all, having to keep the stove going night after night, year after year, for his cronies who whittled up his packing-case seats would tire any man out in seventy-three years.

Life can be hard, down in Maine. Maybe Broadway will be restful by comparison.

Hors D'Oeuvres Scourge.

MAURY MAVERICK, the Texas Congressman, can have your correspondent's support in his campaign against hors d'oeuvres, but only if he includes the entire array of ghastly inedibles as well as the name itself. Hors d'oeuvres are hard enough to pronounce, but the proof of the outrage is in the eating, and the Texas statesman, if he has any honest feeling for his fellow-man, can't consider his duty done merely by changing their name to dingle-doos.

Hors d'oeuvres by any other name are still a scourge, and as they occur almost exclusively at cocktail parties Mr. Maverick might wisely extend his front and move to abolish the cocktail party, too.

THESE TWIN abominations are a holdover from the prohibition era, when people gathered in the afternoon to protest against the foul amendment and stayed on far into the night, boring one another with pointless anecdotes and reminiscences of golf, the war and Goldman-Sachs. Repeal abolished the reason for the existence of the cocktail party, and it now lives on borrowed, not to say stolen, time, an awful proceeding causing biliousness, marital misadventure, contusions and abrasions, late hours and loud talk.

Not for years has anyone willingly gone to a cocktail party, and the institution needs only a slight push to destroy it and set men free. Abolish the cocktail party and you will be relieved to note the simultaneous disappearance of the cheese stick, the bowls of salted peanuts and popcorn, the stuffed olive wrapped in bacon and impaled on a wabbly toothpick, the deadly coils of the anchovy, the horrible dabs of red caviar in sour cream, the quarter sections of leathery antipasto and all the hundred evil little smears of deviled paste on brittle crust which cracks in the fingers and drops goo on the necktie.

Abolish the cocktail party and you will disperse all that uneasy company of mutually suspicious strangers who meet through mumbled introductions and never catch the names and then roam around, lost, friendless and forlorn, looking for a familiar face —if only that of an old and well-detested enemy.

IT IS THE WORST TRIAL in life, the cocktail party, comparable in its loneliness to a child's first day at school, but worse because there is always a chance that the person who says, "Nice day," may be the weather man or his wife. Or the one who says, "Do you like Ben Bernie?" is Ben Bernie or his wife.

Your correspondent has met several men named Cohen at cocktail parties, always keeping the left out, so to speak, lest there should be some special Cohen among them. Then, lately, dropping his guard, your correspondent met another Mr. Cohen at cocktails and was on the point of uttering some small talk about gents' ready-to-wear when Nicholas Murray Butler, or it might have been Bishop Manning, said:—"P-s-s-st! You damn fool! That is Octavus Roy Cohen—Saturday Evening Post." How was I to know?

They ought to wear labels at cocktail parties as the Rotarians do, and at the motion picture cocktail parties wear their salary figures, too, in large, plain numerals.

There was some point to the cocktail party and the deadly hors d'oeuvres in prohibition time. Strangers we may have been to one another individually, but comrades we were in something which was, to borrow a phrase from the Klux, a sacred, unfailing bond of rebellion. Any man who acquired a pint, quart or case, whether of house paint, disinfectant or silo liquor, felt an obligation to share his good luck with as many kindred souls as he could oblige with what he had.

So he issued his invitations to the most obstreperous rebels he knew without regard for their compatibility on any other subject but their one, obvious mutual interest.

THEY CAME a-running and a-thirsting, male and female, and of all ages and occupations, and when the cocktail hour was over they were walking up the walls and making clandestine dates, sometimes with their own wives and husbands, not knowing—God help them—what they were doing by that time. And, of course, they had to lay in a little stokage and dunkage to absorb their poison, and that was where the hors d'oeuvres nuisance entered our social life.

Only now it comes to your correspondent that the best way to avoid hors d'oeuvres is to stay away from the cocktail party, and that the one certain way to destroy them both is to do it over and over.

And how do you suppose Congressman Maverick was driven to the protest point regarding hors d'oeuvres if he had been living the cloistered life becoming a Texas statesman? Is his interest personal or only academic? In his protest he seems to speak as one who has suffered.

John E. Williams

By William Lyon Phelps

Missionary.

Mr. Reginald Wheeler, the author of nine or ten books, an American who has done missionary and Y. M. C. A. work in various parts of the United States, China, Japan, East Africa and South America, himself a member of the faculty of the University of Nanking, China, has written and recently published a short biography, called "John E. Williams of Nanking," which gives us not only the story of a brave and gallant American gentleman, but gives us much valuable information about conditions in China and the sanitary, educational and religious work going on in that vast country. This book is published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York.

* * * *

Mr. Williams was murdered by a Communist Chinese soldier on the premises of the University of Nanking, March 24, 1927. He had given 28 years of faithful service in the Far East.

* * * *

Apart from the enormous help given to the people in distant lands by the food, clothing, medical and surgical assistance, sanitation, care of children, education supplied by the missionaries, when we consider the religious and spiritual aspects of missionary work, we should always remember what Dr. Jones said in his little book, "The Christ of the Indian Road." When the native said to him, "What do you mean by trying to substitute your American civilization with all its horrible faults and sins for our ancient Eastern civilization?" Dr. Jones replied, "Why, we have not the slightest idea of trying to introduce our American civilization or substituting it for yours. We are trying to introduce the way of life taught by the Master, which both America and India need more than they need anything else."

A Yodeling License.

Orange, N. J., in the years to come may be the goal of grateful pilgrims from all points of the compass. it has, at any rate, started something that might be copied the world around with accompanying cheers from otherwise defenseless millions. It has required a yodeler to take out a license, or rather co-operated with him in the matter. Last spring he was yoo-hooing in the park and a policeman more or less naturally thought he was disturbing the peace. We still think the policeman may have been in the right of it, at that.

Anyhow, in times when people live so close to one another that houses all but rub together in a high wind and only thin walls separate many apartments, anyone who wants to yodel should be obliged to submit his desire to public scrutiny, should supply satisfactory proof that he will seek the fastnesses of the nearest approximation of an Alp, and a secluded Alp, before giving way to whatever urge it is that prompts men and women to gargle a scream.

Outlook In Cuba

By Guillo Luis.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Havana.

THE THIRD MONTH of President Frederico Laredo Bru's administration as President of Cuba closed in an atmosphere more nearly approximating political tranquillity than this capital has known since the early winter of 1933, when, with prosperity general, Gerardo Machado was re-elected without opposition for a six-year term, the constitution having been changed to permit this. Only a few months after such triumph, Machado faced political opposition and armed rebellion for more than four years, in which terrorism played no small part.

Political and economic conditions are closely related in Cuba, as elsewhere. Cuba is economically on the upsurge. Sugar has been resuscitated by the Hull reciprocal treaty. Heavy shipments have also been made of vegetables at the height of the winter market.

How placidly Cuba views trade relations under the treaty was shown when the recent message of President Roosevelt to the American Congress, suggesting the imposition of an excise tax upon sugar in the American market, failed to cause much more than a flurry of panic in Cuba. It was quickly recalled that, as drafted by the American Secretary of State, Article 8 of the treaty fixed provisions dealing with excise taxes. While this restricted Cuba's use of such taxes on imports from the United States, it is now generally accepted hereabouts that the Washington Government is not going to take any action that lessens the good neighbor policy declarations upon which Latin-American negotiations have been predicated.

Cubans Feel Immune From Sugar Excise Taxes.

APART FROM legalistic arguments, Cuba is feeling comparatively safe, although the press makes it very clear that the proposed sugar tax is a hope of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and the sugar bloc restrictionists in the United States Congress.

Imports from the United States have been increasing, particularly in capital goods. Foodstuff imports have been falling off slightly, showing that the Cuban countryside is approaching self-sufficiency.

The sugar harvest is under way and mills are grinding with Cuba's allotment fixed at about 2,000,000 tons that may be shipped to the United States under the Costigan-Jones law. So far it has been an unusual crop season for the one reason that there has not been a major labor trouble reported, and controversies between colonos and mills have been very few. Labor organizations no longer have alien leadership, and this has tended toward harmony.

Frederic Laredo Bru became president during the last Christmas holidays. Events leading up to his ascendancy from the vice presidency did not augur well for anything like peaceful tenure. It will be recalled that President Jose Marino Gomez was impeached and ousted from office, following his veto of a school-tax law for the establishment of civic-military rural schools under the direction of the general army staff. For several weeks the political emotions seethed, but the public generally refused to get excited.

It was the rural sections that settled the issue. The word was out that the army wanted to establish free schools in every village. The peasants gave little thought to the possibility that this might mean Fascism or military rule. What was envisioned was simply better education for the young of the countryside. So the army won by the votes of rural representatives who had come into office in all the glorification that surrounded Gomez but a few weeks before.

New President Shows Self For Real Executive.

OUT OF the imbroglio that brought his elevation, it would have been nothing unusual if the new president had taken time for temporizing. But, it must be said, Bru stepped forth as his own presidential personage in full panoply of all that the office means in Cuba, and with adaptation of policies that might have been planks in the longest of political platforms.

All of this has been a bit unusual, just as was his island-wide tour of the provinces. In this he was joined by various of his cabinet, and on the longest trip, through the southern coast and to the eastern province of which Santiago de Cuba is capital, by Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of staff of the army, the recognized "Man of the Country," who persists in deprecating that he is the "Man in Front."

In a dual sense the tour was a success. There was a series of ovations and adulation in which both the president and his staff officer showed to some advantage. The tour also made it possible for the new president to meet many groups and discuss their problems with them.

Illustrative of the unusual activity of the administration is the handling of the troublesome immigration laws. For a number of years lax administration of these laws permitted importation of thousands of impoverished laborers from other West Indian islands, who, after the sugar cane harvest, remained as charges upon communities. The engineer, Amador Lopez, head of the department of agriculture, and Dr. Zenon Gomez y Garcia, minister of public health, have held a series of conferences with sugar estate owners and plans have been worked out for repatriation of thousands of these workers. Some 5,000 have already been sent to their former homes.

University And Schools Reopening Throughout Island.

DR. FERNANDO SIRGO, minister of education, has been chairman of the commission which undertook reorganization and reopening of the University of Havana, but it is in the job of organizing what is known as the civil military rural schools that real progress has been made. In the first two months, and before collection of the sugar tax of about 3 cents per 100 pounds was under way, dozens of these schools have been opened and the first thousand enrollments passed. There is something of the unusual in these institutions of primary learning. The system was devised by the army and many teachers are given noncommissioned rank, without uniform; but the curriculum follows that of the civil school staffs.

It has dawned upon all that the army was put behind the project to get the tax levied, the funds earmarked for the schools only and local resident "protectors" provided for. The check-up is that every villager knows all about the number of bags of sugar produced in the district, and just how much the school should have in funds. This was difficult when rural school funds were otherwise accounted for.

Gen. Rafael Montalvo y Morales, who served as minister of defense in the Gomez cabinet, is foreign minister. A trade treaty with Great Britain, a very good tobacco customer, has been completed. However, according to official announcements, no treaty is in negotiation with Japan. Cuba has a textile industry to safeguard, and views with alarm the Nipponese flood of cotton goods that are descending upon other West Indies.

By 101 to 28 the national congress voted confidence in all that has happened politically, including the ouster of President Gomez. This action led to the resignation of the widely known Dr. Marques Sterling, diplomat, constitutional leader and frequent delegate from Cuba to international conferences. The troubles of Gomez took place while some of the cabinet and leading supporters were absent at the Buenos Aires conference. Dr. Sterling resigned as president of the Chamber of Deputies, as did the two vice presidents and secretary, and after the congress had voted to uphold its own acts, successors were chosen from the majority group.

Batista Continues Role Hero And Enigma Of Cuba.

COL. FULGENCIO BATISTA continues both the popular hero and enigma in the Cuban political picture. During the enthusiasm that prevailed during the Bru-Batista tour Senator Luis Caines Milanes, of Oriente, acting president of the Liberal Party, published a party proclamation calling upon Batista to become the nominee of the Liberals, when an election shall be held for President.

A few days later, Batista made one of his rare direct pronunciamentos in the press, in which he declared that he wanted it well considered that he neither wanted nor would accept the candidature of any political party, and that his duty to the nation was solely to uphold the responsibility of his position in the army.

However, Col. Batista remarked in effect, apropos of political parties and strife—there were 18 parties participating in the last Cuban elections:

"It is my great aspiration to see all of the Cuban people drawn into one genuine constituent assembly, to promulgate for the Cuban nation a new and fundamental political organization."

Just a few hours' sailing from Cuba is the Dominican Republic, where there is one political party, 95 per cent strong in the land, the Dominican Party, which raised another young soldier from barracks to presidency.

Catalan Art

By E. O. Deeble

Exhibition In Paris.

Paris.

SOCIALITES and art lovers more deeply acquainted with the subject matter in hand mingled recently at the opening of the exhibition of Catalan art from the tenth to the fifteenth centuries, in the Jeu de Paume Museum of the Tuileries Gardens. A more polyglot crowd it would have been hard to find even in Paris, but there could not fail to be real interest aroused by the superb collection of ancient art objects which the Catalan government here displays as a mute but telling answer to those self-styled art lovers who have been telling the world at the top of their lungs that the Spanish "Reds" have no respect for antiquity and beauty.

About two-thirds of the collection consists of objects already known to the world of art, being loans from one or another of the various Catalan museums. But perhaps more interest centers around the rest, which are recent discoveries brought to light during the fighting of the early days of Spain's military mutiny. A few paintings, among this latter lot, came from private houses whose owners were Fascists, and were thus confiscated. Most of the sculptures and other art objects, however, shown now for the first time were found in conditions of more or less shameful neglect, not only in country churches, but even in the Cathedral of Barcelona itself.

PROBABLY the most striking piece of cathedral neglect was the case of two parts of a magnificent series of fifteenth century painting of the Passion of Christ, which had been missing since the invasion by the French of Napoleon's time, and it was thought had been destroyed then. These were discovered in the Cathedral of Barcelona, in use to stop a hole in a broken window pane. There is no knowing how long they had been there or who was responsible for the vandalism, but they were fortunately not so exposed to the weather as to ruin them entirely. They are now shown in their proper place in the series.

Another find of enormous interest is the upper part of a figure of Christ, evidently part of a Descent from the Cross of the same or perhaps an earlier period as those of which Boston's Fogg Museum is so proud. This magnificent fragment was discovered in the lumber-room of a country church to which it had been relegated perhaps centuries ago, and there was evidence to make it appear that the remainder of the group to which it belonged had been chopped up for use as kindling wood by the sacristan at some period.

* * * *

THE SUPERB SILVER ALTAR of Gerona Cathedral is on display in its entirety at the head of the stairs leading to the upper floor, the excellent lighting making it possible to study it better than has been the case while it remained in the Cathedral. It has not been overestimated, being a fine work in repousse silver, with polychrome painting on the silver. It consists of a reredos about four to eight feet, under a large canopy supported on four slender posts, the whole being covered with the wrought and painted silver.

What is supposed by some authorities to be the most ancient tapestry in existence, the so-called "Creation," also from the Gerona Cathedral, is on display. This is contemporaneous with the Bayeux tapestry, if not older, and is in a remarkable state of preservation The coloring and workmanship on this, as well as on the later piece of embroidery which served as the altar frontal in the chapel of St. George in the Generalidad at Barcelona, show that needlework was one of the highest arts in the medieval period in Catalonia.

* * * *

THE FAMOUS SILVER THRONE from Barcelona Cathedral is at last to be seen freed from the collection of wrist watches and diamond earrings which had been left to it in the wills of the devout but tasteless during so many years, and is found to be of outstanding beauty both of design and workmanship. The gold "custodia" which invariably stood on the throne is also much improved by the removal of extraneous matter, although some of the objects with which it had been hung about were in themselves of considerable antiquity and beauty.

In spite of a most judicious work of selection, there are too many things in the collection to describe each of them separately here. The collection will, however, be on view in Paris two months, and will then, it is hoped, visit other European capitals. No one who has the chance to see it should fail to do so.

Minnie Of Standard Oil.

("The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey has a cat, Minnie, which it keeps on its regular pay roll as a relentless mouser."—News item.)

Minnie of the Standard Oil—
Gee, but you're the lucky goil! . . .
What a famous role, at that . . .
You're the Rock-e-feller cat!

You're no feline ordinary
Mousing for Tom, Dick and Harry;
When you hunt the rodents, Min,
The result's as good as in.

Billion dollar corporations
Lift a cat by several stations;
You have prestige, you have power
Ample to make all mice cower.

All your meows should now be, pussy,
Reminiscent of de Bussy;
Go for culture quickly, honey,
Minnie you are in the money.

Yours, oh, Min, must be a gay role—
You are carried on the pay roll;
You don't have to slave and toil, dear—
You are kept by Standard Oil, dear!

Scorn those tomcats in the alley!
You're a most exclusive gally;
Let that back-fence wild romancer
Tell the gang "She doesn't answer."

When you fall in love, oh, Minnie,
Do it not in mood quite jinny;
Have a very high ambition—
Don't forget, Min, your position!

When you sense the urge maternal
In the season soft and vernal,
Keep your head and don't get giddy . . .
Standard Oil won't like it, kiddy!

Choose a mate, my dear, who's done things,
Get a boy who's gone and won things;
While you need not be a piggy,
Don't forget that you're a "biggie."

Some day you'll have kittens, maybe,
(Each the S. O. type of baby);
Each a puss of lofty station—
All in one big corporation.

L'envoi.

Minnie of the Standard Oil
You will never have to toil;
This advice to mice, we tender:
Don't fight Standard Oil!
Surrender!

Stalemate Of Distrust

Britain's Rearmament Found An Influence For Peace In Europe But Program Offers No Permanent Perch For Dove.

By David Wills,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

OUR BRITISH STATESMEN are waiting to accept the plaudits of what they hope will be an admiring and thankful public. They hope that the tide toward war in Europe has turned, and the credit, they say, should be given to the British policies of rearmament and masterly inaction. The basis for this hope is the change in the international situation which has developed since the British rearmament program was announced. Japan, Italy and Germany have been the main sources of danger and in each country there have been drastic changes.

Japan's new foreign minister has talked openly of the need for cooperation with Britain in the Far East, of a recognition of China's growing power and of the need for a new and peaceful policy. His statements had to be clarified by contradictions at the request of his superior military officers in the government, but there is strong evidence of a changing atmosphere in the Orient. The Japanese have become dissatisfied with the failure of the military to obtain results, were surprised with the outburst of criticism in England against the German-Japanese pact. It does not seem likely from the present position that either Japan or Germany would find the other of much value as military allies.

Italy has lost prestige among her friends, her satellites, and her foes by the defeat of her armies at Madrid. It is now clear beyond question that Italy is at war with Spain just as she was at war with Abyssinia, and Japan at war with Manchuria.

Noninterventionists Shocked By Grandi's Stand.

THE SLUMBERING nonintervention committee was shocked from its sleep when Grandi informed it that Italy in his opinion would not withdraw any Italians from Spain before the end of the war. Maisky demanded investigation of Italian breaches of the nonintervention agreement, France warned Italy that any further attempts to put Italian soldiers in Spain would be opposed by the French navy. Germany was invited to join in pursuading Italy to keep her obligations. And after referring all awkward questions to sub-committees the nonintervention committee went back to its leisurely work of working out a control scheme to prevent intervention.

Mussolini rushed home from his sword-waving trip in Libya to make up his mind on the Spanish affair. To keep him in good humor his Italian football team had been booed out of the grounds at Vienna by what he had supposed were dutiful Austrians, and in Paris his name was being played up in an "affair of passion." No longer could he maintain his argument that there were no Italian soldiers in Spain, despite the apparent willingness of the British government to believe his story that 2,000 men shipped in in one batch since the control scheme came into force were all doctors and medical assistants. He had to choose between open warfare against Spain or retreat.

Obviously he is extremely reluctant to bring his Italians now in Spain who have for perhaps the first time in their lives heard criticism of the Fascist regime, have seen something other than fascism. The news of so many Italian deaths in a cause which does not interest the Italian people is bound to leak out in Italy. Mussolini can hardly choose open warfare on a larger scale since he has been given notice by the French that no Italian occupation of Spain will be allowed to endanger French communications with Africa. He may choose to send to Spain not more men, but more airplanes, bombs, and possibly poison gas. But it may be that he recognizes the strength of the opposition and is blowing off his indignation by damning Anglican parsons who dare to criticize him, cursing the English, glorifying the irresistible power of Italy, the country which never forgets an insult.

Germany Experiencing Unexpected Resistance.

GERMANY has also found unexpected resistance to her policies. Her plan to kill the League, sterilize the Franco-Soviet pact by her new four-power alliance in west Europe is not going well. And unexpected criticism has come from the Pope in his encyclical against Naziism. Germany had hoped that Italy would turn her attention to the Mediterranean, leave Europe to her. This hope seemed to be confirmed by Mussolini's shouldering the burden of the Spanish war, his efforts to build up Italian naval power in the Mediterranean by control of Spain, of the narrows between Italy and Africa and of the east coast of the Red Sea.

The Austrians thought they had been sold out to Germany when Mussolinin dropped his support for Schuschnigg and the Hapsburgs. But the Pope has not been prepared to sacrifice the Roman Catholic Church in Germany for the purposes of political alliances between Germany and Italy. His encyclical against communism, in favor of the corporative state, which is fascism, makes the split clearer.

The Pope protests not merely against Nazi breaches of the concordat signed in 1933; he denounced specifically many of the philosophical arguments which are fundamental to Naziism, such as deificatoin of race, nationality, state. There have been rumors that Hitler may be excommunicated from the church. This strong papal opposition to the Nazis will reinforce the resistance which Christian church of all denominations are showing to the Nazi attempt to paganize Germany. It must be clearer than ever to Hitler that not only is Germany economically unprepared for war, but that the people are not united behind him.

Small European States Deserting Hitler And Duce.

THE DISCREDIT brought upon Italy and Germany by recent events has discouraged many of the people of the central and southeastern states which have thought in the past that their best policy was to tie themselves to the coat tails of whichever dictator offered them the biggest bribes. Austria is definitely turning away from both Germany and Italy, trying to find security in an alliance with Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The Nazi plot in Hungary found its occasion in the obvious desire of the Hungarian government to turn toward a Danubian confederation. These tendencies are slight at present, but they are evidence of a disinclination to go with the dictators.

To offset this co-ordination of the southeastern states in independence, Mussolini and Hitler are trying their best to secure support for their own alliances. Yugoslavia is signing an agreement with Italy, Germany doing her best in Hungary. Their actions prevent any long-term solution of the Danubian problem, since they are based on the need of securing allies for war.

An unknown element in the present situation is the course of the negotiations in London between the King of the Belgians and the British government on Belgian neutrality. It is not believed in London that Belgium wishes to or could withdraw from the League system as proposed by Germany. But the proposal is disconcerting to Britain and France, since it upsets the military strategies prepared by them for the event of another west European war. These conversations were said to be one of the reasons why Mussolini returned suddenly to Italy, from which it is supposed he had heard they were not going too favorably from his point of view. It is believed in London that any Belgian prime minister who went to the country on a policy of neutrality on the line proposed in the German plan would be defeated.

Future Seen Holding No Reconstruction Hope.

BUT WHEN ALL is said to suggest that the bluff put up with success by the dictators for so long has at last been called, and that they will now climb down under a smoke screen of bluster, the outlook is not rosy for an active plan of reconstruction of the peace mechanism of Europe. It is more of a stalemate than a victory for peace. As has so often been pointed out, the initiative for that peace must come from Europe and from England in particular. Over the rearmament program in England there is no longer much controversy; it is accepted by all parties, although there is constant criticism of the manner in which money is to be raised, and so on. Re-armament on our present scale would be considered a cheap price to pay if it really wiped out the effect of our past errors and produced a permanent peace in Europe.

The trouble is that although for the time being re-armament may have contributed to paralyze the aggressors, it contributes nothing positive to peace. And at present the attitude of the majority of our press and of our government is not helpful. The majority of the press seems to support more masterly inaction. It is generally agreed that one of the most important ways to advance peace would be to relax economic restrictions on international trade. Asked if Britain would support a low-tariff group of countries, Mr. Baldwin replied that Britain had already contributed her share to lower restrictions, that the initiative must come from the countries with higher tariffs.

But our optimists offer us the hope that the pressure of events will force the government to adopt a positive foreign policy which will make the best of the situation created by the present stalemate in Europe. The irresistible pressure of circumstance will, they suggest, convince our government that by no other means than lower tariffs, a restored League of Nations and a juster colonial system will peace be maintained. The pessimists say that during the last two years the optimists have always been wrong.

Fascists Beaten In Belgian Vote

of Malines, disavowing him.

"It was a late hour maneuver," Belgium, Cardinal and Archbishop Degrelle said, "and I did not have time to reply. The Flemish Nationalists also partially deserted me as a result of the primate's letter."

He denied there was any conflict between the Vatican and Rexism, declaring "the conflict is not between us and the church, but between us and the Archbishop of Malines."

His alliance with the Flemish Nationalists, he said, had proved "detrimental."

Van Zeeland Nonpartisan.

The mild-mannered Van Zeeland entered Brussels from his chateau at 7 p. m. today amid scnes of wild enthusiasm in the streets.

Today was the first time he ever ran for office and he belongs to no political party. He was chosen premier principally because he is an expert economist.

In a declaration issued to the electors, thanking them for their support, Van Zeeland said:

"I congratulate you on the clear, categoric reply you have given to th question put before you. Thanks to you, no one now either in Belgium or beyond her frontiers can for a single moment doubt the will of Belgium to rest faithful with herself, worthy of her heroic past and equal to the great hope so many men have put in her.

Degrelle, whose first major defeat came on his thirtieth birthday, received the election returns in his office.

Rain, which fell intermittently all day, ceased sufficiently to permit crowds to celebrate Van Zeeland's victory. Rexists remained away and police barred streets surrounding their headquarters.

Both Socialists and Communists backed Van Zeeland and they carried through the streets grotesque, 8-foot figures representing Degrelle and his lieutenants, some with the heads off.

The election was to fill a seat in th Chamber of Deputies made vacant by resignation of one of Degrelle's followers. The premier, head of the coalition government of Catholics, Socialists and Liberals, accepted the Rexist leader's challenge to contest the seat as a test of whether Belgium was turning toward fascism.

Plan to Rebuild U. S. Ship Lines To Be Speeded

By the Associated Press.

Senate confirmation of the President's five appointees to the permanent maritime commission will signal beginning of a program intended to rebuild the American Merchant Marine.

The Commerce Committee is expected to hand to the Senate within a few days the unanimous approval by a sub-committee of the appointments of Joseph P. Kennedy, Rear Admiral Henry A. Wiley, Admiral Emory S. Land, Thomas M. Woodward, of Pennsylvania, and Edward C. Moran, jr., of Maine, as members of the maritime commission. The President selected Kennedy, former head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, as chairman.

Financial Problem.

Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, author of the Merchant Marine act creating the commission, said yesterday the biggest problem confronting the agency was the task of financing American ship line operators with a direct operating subsidy instead of the present indirect ocean mail contract subsidy.

Another task of prime importance, he said, will be the upbuilding of the Merchant Marine fleet with Government subsidies for construction.

The new commission, replacing the temporary body which has functioned since last fall, also will find among its pressing problems the disposal of much of the merchant fleet ecently ordered into drydock, and the regulation of standards for seamen's wages and working conditions.

Contracts Studied.

Under administration of Admiral Wiley, chairman of the temporary commission, the Government maritime body has conferred with more than half of the 50 ship line operators, regarding adjustment of the present mail contract subsidies and the substitution of the new Federal operating subsidies. The mail contracts expire June 30.

Copeland estimated operating subsidies to bolster American Merchant Marine competition with foreign ship lines would run between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000 a year. The subsidies are designed to make up the difference between the high operating costs of the American fleets and the low costs of their foreign competitors.

Buck, adapted to the screen by Talbot Jennings, Tess Slesinger and Claudine West, with musical score by Herbert Stothart, costarring Paul Muni and Luise Rainer, with Walter Connolly, Charles Grapewin, Tilly Losch, Jessie Ralph, Soo Yong, Keye Luke, Roland Lui, Suzanna Kim, Chingwah Lee, Harold Huber, Olaf Hytten, William Law and Mary Wong. Directed by Sidney Franklin. At the National Theater. Previewed Wednesday night, March 24.

With box-office receipts constantly mounting throughout the first week of its run, "The Good Earth," Metro-Goldwin-Mayer's impressive picturization of the Pearl S. Buck novel of the same name, yesterday began its second week as a road-show attraction at the National Theater.

The success of the Washington engagement of this superlative picture merely adds another chapter to the record of consistent triumph that "The Good Earth" is compiling in all cities in the United States where it has been shown. There is ample reason for this enthusiastic public acclaim.

To begin with, this epochal film has been perfectly cast. In the costellar roles of Wang Lung and O-Lan are Paul Muni and Luise Rainer, winners of the Academy Awards for the best acting the screen had to offer in 1936; pivotal supporting roles are played with remarkable fidelity by Walter Connolly, as the indigent uncle of Wang; Charles Grapewin, as his father, and Jessie Ralph, as Cuckoo, mistress of the Big House from which Wang takes a slave girl to wife and later buys when his tilling of the soil has made him rich. Innumerable contributory parts are played with no less distinction by a total ensemble that numbers thousands.

Story Is Preserved.

The story of the book has been preserved with intelligent and respectful accuracy, although there necessarily have had to be deletions of certain sequences to bring the film within normal theater running time. Even so, it consumes 2 hours and 20 minutes on the screen at the National.

Not the least important of the many elements of greatness that characterize this production are its amazing photographic effects. The revolutionary scenes in the south of China, where Wang and his family have gone to escape the drought and stave off the likelihood of starvation, are executed with tremendous effectiveness. It is here that the episode of the pearls has its inception and O-Lan becomes victim of the perfidy of her husband, who brings a new wife into the home to which she has borne him the sons he wanted to carry on the name and family prestige.

Another scene that is devastating in its effect, both literally and figuratively, is the one depicting the plague of locusts that swarm down on the lands of Wang Lung and threaten the destruction of the family fortunes. This alone is worth the price of admission as one of the most notable example of the montage process the cinema has been able to offer to date.

High Level Maintained.

There is no point in the picture, as a matter of fact, where the high level of excellence ever recedes. It is a perfectly acted, directed and photographed film that represents the motion picture arts and crafts at the highest point of their efficiency and artistry.

The story, to be sure, is one of serious import and somber content. It presents nothing in the way of gay or inconsequential entertainment. Like the book, the picture undertakes—and succeeds beyond every reasonable expectation—to portray the sullen impositions of life upon the struggles of the underprivileged, who finally come to wealth and power.

If one finds it possible to approach this subject in the spirit of the book and with no thought of frivolous diversion, he will be repaid by a panorama of life that will prove convincing, immeasurably picturesque and dramatically powerful.

I recommend "The Good Earth" unequivocally as a sterling example of the best the screen has to offer in the way of adult and profoundly moving entertainment. N. B. B.

Rialto

"CONGRESS DANCES." UFA picturization of a story by Norbert Falk and Robert Liebmann, released by United Artists, featuring Lilian Harvey, Conrad Veidt, Henry Garat, Lil Dagover, Gibb McLaughlin, Reginald Purcell and Helen Haye.

"DEATH TAKES A HOLIDAY." Paramount picturization of the stage play by Alberto Casella, adapted to the screen by Maxwell Anderson and Gladys Lehmann, starring Fredric March, with Evelyn Venable, Sir Guy Standing, Katherine Alexander, Gail Patrick, Helen Westley, Kent Taylor, Henry Travers, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Edward Van Sloan and Anna de Linsky.

It is a double-feature bill that is being presented on the screen at the Rialto Theater this week.

Stressed a little in the billing—although one wonders why—is "Congress Dances," with "Death Takes a Holiday" as the auxiliary film.

"Congress Dances" is one of the first of the international musicals released in this country through United Artists some three or four years ago, with Lilian Harvey making her first bid for favor on the American screen. The story is a mildly satirical one in which the star is supported by a formidable cast, headed by Conrad Veidt, Lil Dagover—who promised to be an American cinema star of the first water, but never quite "jelled" on this side—and Henry Garat, a leading man of notable attainments.

The music, the verve and the subtle humor of this piece have made it one of the cinema's reliables.

"Death Takes a Holiday," of course, is a screen transcription of that more or less baffling stage play of the same name, in which Death ceases to exert its blight and a young girl falls in love with the symbol of destruction impersonated by Fredric March.

This is a play, on both stage and screen, that takes a bit of thinking to grasp its full import. It afforded Fredric March one of his earnest and best stellar opportunities and may be relied upon to engage the interest of any but the most thoughtless of theatergoers.

The bill is completed by short-reel subjects and newsreel, as is the wont at the Rialto.

Little

"AH, WILDERNESS." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the stage play by Eugene O'Neill, featuring Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden, Cecilia Parker, Aline MacMahon and Spring Byington. Directed by Clarence Brown. A revival.

The Little Theater this week revives the film version of Eugene O'Neill's reminscent play of "Ah, Wilderness" as the chief feature of its screen bill.

This is a subject that will appeal to all lovers of "heart interest" drama and those homely qualities of humor that reflect a nostalgic impulse of the author to re-live his youth. It always has been felt that O'Neill, in fashioning this agreeable comedy, drew heavily upon his own boyish experiences for material.

The story is a simple, but immensely moving, one of small-town life in New England, in which the youngster of the family seems to have become involved with a seductive young creature who has "cut out" his boyhood sweetheart. The manner in which the domestic problem is solved affords one of the current theater's most engaging studies in drama of a genre that always will pack a terrific punch for American audiences.

The principal roles are played by Eric Linden, as the boy; Cecilla Parker, as his sweetheart; Wallace Beery, as the bibulous Uncle Sid; Spring Byington, as the mother, and Aline MacMahon in an important part.

The bill, as usual, is completed by short-reel subjects and newsreel.

'Toby Tyler'

The Children's Theater of New York brought its Washington season to a close last Saturday morning with the presentation in the National Theater of "Toby Tyler: Or Ten Weeks With a Circus."

The season has been one of the most successful in the history of the Children's Theater happy incursions into Washington and gives rise to the hope that this splendid organization will continue to keep the National Capital on its regular winter itinerary.

"Toby Tyler" is a play redolent of the big tops and the sawdust ring. It sets forth the adventures of a small boy who runs away from home to join the tent show and after a heartbreakinng experience with the hardships of circus life then scampers back to the parental roof with more alacrity than he left it.

Had it not been for the compassionate companionship of Mr. Stubbs, his little monkey friend, the fat lady and the skeleton man, Toby's life would have been unbearable. This all enters into the dramatic structure of the play, however, in a manner that compounds a distinctly salutary lesson to wandering youth.

The part of the monkey Saturday morning was entrusted to one of the most accomplished of the simian actors—Koko, a young fellow who has been seen times without number on the screen and Saturday made new friends among the audience that filled the theater.

The principal roles in "Toby Tyler," as is always the case in these productions, were played with skill by a cast of adult and juvenile actors.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

A Letter Comes to the Desk From Distant Sumatra, Announcing Showing of a Woody Van Dyke Picture

'Rose Marie' Reaches Other Side of the World While Col. Van Dyke Is a Washington Vacationer; A Few Words About This Able Director; Cornell Extends New York Run of 'Candida;' Calloway Defies Conventions; Notes of the Amusement World.

THERE is never any telling where this globe-trotting fellow is going to bob up next. The first letter I had from him, years ago, came from the heart of the Gobi Desert, in Indo-China; the next from Tunis, in Algeria, and another from his suite on the S. S. Normandie en route somewhere-or-other.

BELL.

Now the postman rings once to leave me this interesting note from Siantur, Sumatra, dated March 6, 1937:

"Dear Nelson Bell: The story of how Nelson Eddy, free-from-wrinkles Mountie, used Jeanette MacDonald, unsuccessful rival of Gilda Gray, as a trail-finder to the hideout of murderer James Stewart, has reached Sumatra.

"If I say the theater was almost cool and the sound system well-nigh perfect, you may ask, 'Whaddaya mean cool?' or say, 'Don't tell me about the acoustics of primitive movie halls.'

"'Rose Marie' played in Medan, the metropolis of this part of Sumatra. But it will soon follow those 'Cockeyed Cavaliers,' Wheeler and Woolsey, up here into the lower hills.

"Crossing the deserted esplanade at Medan the other night in a terrific rainstorm, I caught sight of a white-clad Malay who had sought shelter under a royal palm. Believe it or not, he was whistling the 'Indian Love Call'—not Dutch East Indian, but honest-to-goodness Canuck-Hollywood Indian. 'When I'm Calling You, oo-oo-oo-oo.'

(Signed) "MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS."

It is always a pleasure to hear from this wandering minstrel whose heart never strays very far away from the theater, although he is officially credentialed as foreign editor of the National Geographic Magazine.

This last letter from him reaches Washington opportunely. Col. Woody S. Van Dyke, who directed "Rose Marie"—along with a long list of other box-office smashes—is, at the moment, a Washington visitor, enjoying the first holiday he has had from the studios and lots of Hollywood for years on end.

It ought to interest him that a fellow-countryman has seen his picture over on the other side of the globe.

* * * *

This Woody Van Dyke, by the way, is the most unostentatious and least goaded by delusions of grandeur of all the theoretical megaphone wielders in the film colony, according to my more or less limited observations. He seems to think that the success of his pictures is more a matter of good luck and propitious gods than the result of any particular acumen on his own part. "You get the story and you get the cast, and if the thing clicks you're in, and if it doesn't, it's just too bad," is the way he puts it. This, of course, is a lot of authentic hooey, although quite obviously a sincere conviction on the part of the able fellow who voices it.

If good luck, instead of the Van Dyke genius for effective "theater," was responsible for the superior excellence of "Trader Horn," "Night Court," "The Prize Fighter and the Lady," in which Max Baer and Primo Carnera rehearsed their subsequent championship, heavyweight battle in the ring: "Eskimo," "Manhattan Melodrama," the film that lured John Dillinger to his fate on Chicago's North Side; "The Thin Man," "Forsaking All Others," "Naughty Marietta," "I Live My Life," with Joan Crawford and Brian Aherne; "Rose Marie" and "San Francisco," then I am a Chinaman. Just to beat you to it, I probably am, anyway.

Mr. Van Dyke, incidentally, will be in town for another week or ten days, looking at, but probably not seeing, the cherry blossoms, renewing old acquaintanceships and otherwise having himself a time, as befits a gentleman on vacation.

Katharine Cornell, who recently received the National Achievement Award from the hands of Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, wife of the President, at the White House, once more has extended her New York supplementary season in George Bernard Shaw's comedy of "Candida," in the Empire Theater. Miss Cornell has added a fortnight to the run of the play, thus making a month's run of this revival, instead of the originally contemplated two weeks.

This necessarily postpones her appearances in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago in the spring tour of Maxwell Anderson's "The Wingless Victory" and "Candida." In the meantime, the cast of "The Wingless Victory" are enjoying a month's leave of absence on full pay—an old Cornell custom.

Speaking of Maxwell Anderson, the selection of his "High Tor" by the New York Drama Critics Circle as the best play of 1936 has caused that work to leap into the SRO class of Broadway attractions. Standing room has been at a premium ever since the award of the critics was made to this comedy, starring Burgess Meredith and Peggy Ashcroft.

Cab Calloway, whose Cotton Club Orchestra and associate specialists are presenting the stage program at Loew's Capitol Theater this week, is an innovator in more than any mere exposition of what can be done with broken rhythms and barbaric harmonies. Cab is dressing his personal portion of the stage bill with a daring that should flutter the eyelids of the style arbiters. He is wearing a light, brownish-gray, tail suit with white tie and waistcoat, that seems to be made of strictly business suit material adapted to the formal lines of evening wear. The effect is not so bad, but I dare you to attempt the same thing for use in the more austere of the dressy spots. Boy, would you get the hoot!

John Gielgud, who established a new American record for consecutive performances of Shakespeare's "Hamlet" in Guthrie McClintic's production of the tragedy this past season, will make his first appearance in Emlyn Williams' new play, "He Was Born Gay," in Glasgow, Scotland, tonight. After a tour of the English provinces, he will present the drama in London during the coronation festivities.

This, needless to say, is communicated to me by that helpful stentor of the Cornell-McClintic enterprises known by the name of Ray Henderson. When, as and if Mr. Gielgud completes his native obligations we will be glad to have him back on this side.

That should be easy since Representative Dickstein's ill-judged bill to bar alien actors has been definitely tossed into the ashcan, as it so richly deserved to be.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, April 11.

Personal observations: Just before William Powell snaps a choice repartee, his pursed lips move sidewise left. After a second high-ball, off screen Frank Morgan becomes his on-screen self. Jean Harlow can jump toward a soft chair and land with both legs doubled under her (I tried it and cracked a shinbone, so look out). When Dick Powell wears a mustache, he modulates his voice in deference to the added distinction. I have yet to see Ann Sothern stand or sit when a stretch-inviting divan is handy.

DICK POWELL.

Mae West slips out of a fur coat as if she is giving the boys a break. Bette Davis takes as great pains with her about-the-house attire as with her going-out dress. Of late, I have seen Greta Garbo when she looked too tired to hold up those fake eyelashes. If you spy a heavy camel's hair coat apparently sitting up alone in a chair, look inside and you find Al Jolson in his habitual slump.

Cautious Robert Montgomery, even in a drawing room he cups his hand for wind protection when he lights a cigaret. When Fred MacMurray sits for chat, he seems to be trying to see how far he can stretch his long legs. Joan Crawford pushes her hat back on her head when she is tired. Contrarily, Jeanette MacDonald pushes hers forward. Something about Lew Ayres' intense expression reminds me of Richard Barthelmess. Anne Shirley is a man's handkerchief-in-breast-pocket arranger.

Bette Davis was taking a severe pushing and mauling for a sequence of her new picture, and after watching for a while, I made comment that her body must be bruised and sore. "I'll say it's sore!" she snapped. "You ought to see the black and blue marks on me." Then she hesitated, smiled, and added: "On second thought, I guess you'd better not see them."

One untouched-by-success actor is Harry Carey. Like most of the oldtimers, who have been in the game for decades, he is too inured to fame to let it bloat his head. He was working with Edward G. Robinson in a difficult scene the other day, and Robinson made a suggestion after which he added, "I hope you don't mind, Harry."

"Not at all," Carey answered. "The longer I remain in this business, the more I realize I'm not God."

Right at this moment, I am dodging Douglas Montgomery. After a two-year absence abroad, he recently returned to Hollywood, and I went to his Pasadena estate to see his peacocks. As Doug was showing them off, he explained that for years they have been flying to a perch outside his living room window. "I always labored under the impression they were staring in at the family," he said, "but I've learned they're merely looking at their reflections in the windows."

"Yeah?" I cracked, out of turn, "just like a bunch of actors?" And as I have already said, I am dodging Montgomery at the moment.

Gayety

Petite little Anne Wynn, a well-above-average acrobatic dancer, served well as balance wheel between the subdued, throaty-voiced provocativenes of Amy Fong, the feature stripper, and the unsubdued blatancy of Eddie Lloyd, a sawed-off comic who was supposed to play second fiddle to Harry Connelly, but didn't.

Measured by the enthusiastic response of the audience, little Lloyd, with his baggy pants at half-mast and his nose at one-and-a-half-mast, was flying high over the rest of the bill.

Only the enigmatical, slant-eyed Miss Wong could even rival him, as she matched tactics diametrically the opposite of his to get under the collective skin of the audience.

Some Peppy Skis.

In between these two extremes came a well-varied and peppy succession of skits, ensemble numbers and dances, in which Harry Connelly, supposedly the top comic artist on the bill, did his best to match uproars with Lloyd, and Delores Greene tried to stay in the running (?) with Miss Fong.

Helping round out the bill were smooth performances by doll-faced little Colleen, who alternated with Miss Fong and Miss Greene in teasing the customers, and Lew Brown and Connie Ryan, who straighted the Messrs. (messers) Connelly and Lloyd.

The ensemble numbers, featuring the dark-eyed chorus of 12, and several striking settings, helped to set off a well-received bill.

Irwin Hunted in Bowery.

New York, April 11 (AP).—Police turned today to the Bowery and "flop-house" sections in their admittedly stymied hunt for Robert Irwin. Detectives said the talented sculptor, whom Police Commissioner Valentine has named as the perpetrator of the triple murder on Beekman Hill, had covered his trail well.

Law Interpretation Blamed for Strikes

By the Associated Press.

James A. Emery, general counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, said last night that interpretation of the national labor relations act was responsible for the prevalence of sit-down strikes.

In a radio speech, Emery contended that although six of the Nation's ten circuit courts of appeal have held that the act does not apply to "employment relations in manufacture" its provisions are being enforced against manufacturers "by a board that displays the impartiality of Mussolini dispensing justice to an Ethiopian."

"No criticism of the union has come from the board in all the sit-downs in which it has been ignored," Emery asserted, "but employers who pursued the pathway of the law to ascertain their rights and duties have been rejected."

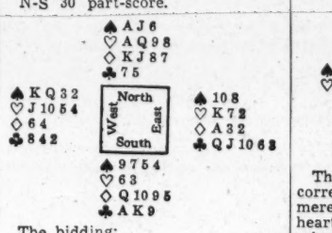
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Poor Partner!

Players who regard their own cards with warm affection and look upon partner's with a sort of patronizing tolerance can hardly expect to achieve satisfactory results. This is particularly true on defense. Many a defender merrily cashing his tricks completely forgets the pressure that he is putting on his own partner. Today's hand is an illustration.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.
N-S 30 part-score.



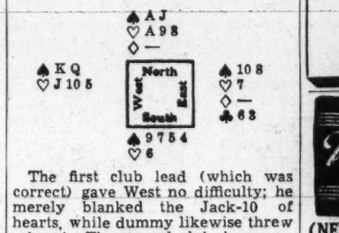
The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ♣	2 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

East probably held his breath when he overcalled with his far-from-robust holding, but the condition of the score made it imperative for him to take some defensive action. West was quite right in not raising the clubs, despite the score. He shrewdly surmised that East might be stretching because of the situation, and another stretch by him might be disastrous.

This point, incidentally, is worth noting—that there are many times when one partner should allow for a "neck-stretching bid" by the other.

West opened his highest club, and declarer allowed East's ten to win. A club was continued; declarer won and cleared away the diamond Ace.



East established his clubs by another lead. Declarer now cashed his three good diamonds. With five tricks only and three to go, declarer could not tell, of course, that both high spade honors were in front of the Ace-Jack; therefore essayed the heart finesse for his fulfilling trick. The Queen lost to East's King. East then cashed his two good clubs and, by so doing, sank the defenders' ship.

Before the first good club was led the five cards left in each hand had been:

The first club lead (which was correct) gave West no difficulty; he merely blanked the Jack-10 of hearts, while dummy likewise threw a heart. The second club, however, put West into a vice. To let go a spade would establish dummy's Ace-Jack; a heart would make the Ace-nine of hearts good. Obviously, had East, after cashing one club trick, shifted to either a spade or a heart, the contract woud surely have been defeated. Of course, the declarer could have discarded differently from the dummy had he known the adverse lay of honors, but the point was that with the existing position East's insistence on his own tricks had been fatal.

East could be certain that, unless West had spades and hearts stopped, his two club tricks would not defeat the contract; if he did have them stopped, cashing them would squeeze West.

Steel Demand Holds Output At 91.5 Per Cent

Pressure for Bookings Covering 3d Quarter Becomes Insistent.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 11.—Steelmaking operations continue at 91½ per cent of capacity, the magazine Steel said today, despite the feeling of uncertainty apparent in the general business situation, resulting from governmental policies."

"Pressure for their quarter bookings has become so insistent that it is intimated some steelmakers may announce prices shortly for that delivery," the magazine's weekly summary added.

"Despite best efforts of producers, deliveries have not been bettered and with larger needs of automobile builders coming out as a result of settlement of strikes in the Detroit area the situation will be further complicated.

"March bookings of plates and shapes in the Pittsburgh district were heavier than the monthly average for 1929.

"Every effort is being made by steel makers to serve regular customers first and orders are booked only after careful scrutiny. Premiums offered for export tonnage are tempting, but domestic business is given preference.

"Advance of 50 cents per hundredweight on tin plate, effective at once, reflects higher wages and material costs. The new price is $5.35, Pittsburgh.

"Steel ingot production in March, 5,229,431 gross tons, was at 90.13 per cent of steelworks' capacity and brought the first quarter to a new record, the highest first quarter of all time. The March tonnage has been exceeded only once, in March, 1929. The quarter's production was 54 per cent above that of the corresponding portion of 1936."

5th District Sales 19% Over 1936

Richmond, Va., April 11 (AP).—The March retail sales reported for the Fifth Federal Reserve District, released today by the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, shows department store sales in the district last month averaged 19 per cent more in dollar amount than sales in March, 1936. Every one of 54 department stores reporting showed higher figures for the 1937 month.

Cumulative sales in the first three months of this year averaged 12 per cent above sales in the corresponding period of last year. A considerable part of the increase in sales last month is attributed to Easter occurring on March 28 this year and not until April 12 last year. March, 1937, also had one more business day than March, 1936.

Tide Water Oil Has 11 New Wells

New York, April 11.—Recent completion of 11 new producers by Tide Water Associated Oil Co. on their 640-acre Johnson lease in Ward County, West Texas, points to extensive additional development of the property.

The 11 new wells bring Tide Water Associated's total on this lease, which is a continuation of the Estes Pool, to 14 wells, with a total potential of more than 40,000 barrels a day, and per well potentials ranging from 1,000 to 8,100 barrels a day. The daily prorated allowable for the company on this lease is 1,640 barrels at present.

Reserve Banks Hurry to Aid of Bonds; President Denies Inflation.

New York, April 11.—The past week in finance has been marked by a psychological disturbance that brought new low prices for the year in stocks, a sharp break in many commodity markets, and a further decline in Government and corporate bonds, interrupted toward the close by a hardening of prices all round on reassuring statements from Washington.

Nothing actually has happened to upset prices in any direction, at least nothing has originated with the week. No new strikes of importance have broken out, and some of the old ones were given the blessings of settlements, which nevertheless appear to be no thicker than piecrusts in the hands of the C. I. O. lawbreaking stalwarts.

Industrial activity last week has been well maintained. Railroad carloadings last week rose sharply over a year ago, but fell under the previous week, largely because of some let-up in coal movement on the temporary passing of a strike scare. Electrical output continued high and operations at some of the motor plants were resumed. Motor-car production and sales in March turn out to have been at record-breaking proportions, the strikes considered. The steel industry, although dipping slightly below 90 per cent of capacity operations this week, was nevertheless reported as having little prospect of an early slump or of meeting much resistance to its higher prices. Retail trade is gaining, as shown by the sales reports of department, chain, mail order and other distributing agencies.

Inflationary Undercurrents.

Too much importance perhaps should not be given to the severe decline in common stocks. Incentives for purchase have been declining. The British government definitely has taken steps to discourage further British investment. It is highly uncertain what our Government is going to do about the rising deficit, although it denies an intention to lift taxes. Strikes are proving to be costly, and their settlement is adding to higher production costs and consequently lowering profit margins. The rate of gain both in business and in markets this year promises to be below that of last year.

On longer view the chance of inflation still are good. In fact, they are greater than ever, for the Government is going to find it extremely difficult to move along the right road economically without running into political mutiny. Moreover, the bulk of investment in stocks is firmly locked in by the high capital gains tax and the impossibility of finding other adequate employment. As for Government bonds, selling in that section has been partly of the nature of one bank trying to beat the other one to it. So much talk has been heard about prices being too high that it was only natural for them to come down. Probably the decline has carried as far as any near term rise in money rates justifies, and banks may have to enter the market again—provided the Government does nothing to frighten them.

What it has done so far no doubt has done more harm than good. The contradictory expressions of opinion by the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board and the President on the dangers of inflation, the necessity for cheap money, the overpricing of commodities, the desirability of higher taxation, the undesirability of any such thing, the cut in the gold price, the denial of any such plan; and finally the absurdity of a cut into excess reserves by the Federal Reserve Board at the same time that it enters the market to lift them by purchasing Government bonds have confused the markets.

Marking Time.

The week was one of inactivity in new securities offerings, as the fall in Government bonds has frightened the insurance companies and other standard investors out of the market. Price cutting in certain commodities—mostly in base metals, as copper, which was lowered from 17 cents to 15½ cents, and lead—was engaged in, but farm prices were well maintained. The Bureau of Labor index of wholesale commodity prices mounted to a new peak with a jump of more than half of 1 per cent. It now stands about 12 per cent above a year ago.

Commercial demand for credit is still rising, but the drop in stocks has turned down brokers' loans, which were reported $11,000,000 lower this week by the Federal Reserve Board. The expected increase in time money went into effect, when the banks lifted the price for three to six months' loans by one-quarter of 1 per cent. However, the state of excess reserves and the activity of business do not seem to warrant any material rise in long-term rates, and the experience of the 1920-1930 period suggests that it may be possible to have sharply rising short-term rates without corresponding increases in long-term money.

Meanwhile the bank statements of condition as of March 21 show considerable liquidation of Government bonds and a rise in deposits. For the country the liquidation of investment seems to have totaled around $600,000,000. Some bearing on the immediate future may be obtained next week when the President sends his relief budget to Congress. If it proves to be a high one, in the face of the known fact that the recovery in business has reduced unemployment to perhaps near the minimum of a mere voting force, fresh doubts will arise as to budget balancing sincerity.

China to Resume Interest on Bonds

New York, April 11 (AP).—The foreign bondholders' protective council announced today an offer by the Chinese government to resume service on the Republic of China's 2-year 6 per cent treasury notes of 1919.

The notes are outstanding in the amount of $5,500,000. The offer provides that interest during a three-year period commencing November 1, 1936, shall be paid at the rate of 2½ per cent annually, and from November 1, 1939, at the rate of 5 per cent, payable semiannually.

Lazard Freres Analyze Callable Bond Issues

A pamphlet tabulation just issued by Lazard Freres & Co., New York, lists 300 callable railroad, public utility and industrial bonds of general market interest, bearing 4½ per cent, 5 per cent and higher coupons which have sold over their call prices this year.

The pamphlet also discusses the advantages and risks attached to the purchase of high coupon callable bonds, selling over their call prices.

Public offering of 123,400 shares of new convertible preferred stock, $2 par value, of United States Casualty Co., New York, is being made today by means of a prospectus by Robert Garrett & Sons, Baltimore, and Paine, Webber & Co., priced at $10 per share, plus accrued dividends. This offering represents outstanding shares owned by New Amsterdam Casualty Co., sole parent of the corporation, which, on March 15, owned 93 per cent of the outstanding stock and does not constitute new financing by the company.

The stock is preferred as to assets to the extent of $10 per share, and is redeemable in whole or part at the company's option, on 60 days' notice, at $11 per share, plus any accumulated dividends. It is entitled to cumulative dividends of 45 cents per share, payable semi-annually, and participating to the extent that if the common stock has received dividends of 40 cents per share in any years the preferred will receive equal participation with the common up to an additional 20 cents per share, and also one-half of dividends declared on the common in excess of 60 cents a share in any one year. It is convertible into $2 par common stock on a share-for-share basis.

Negotiations are under way for a fifth plane, which, if consummated, will raise the figure to a total of $258,000.

The ships, which will be used by the Navy for transportation of personnel, will be six-passenger twin-engined monoplanes powered by Wasp engines capable of a top speed of 226 miles per hour and a cruising speed of 180.

New York, April 11 (AP).—United Biscuit Co., with Nation-wide bulk and package distribution, reports consolidated net profit for the year ended December 31 of $1,180,776 after all charges, equal after preferred dividends to $2.39 a share on the common stock.

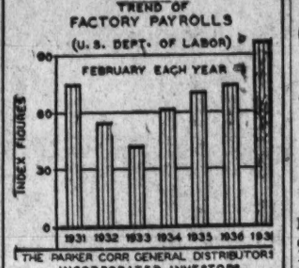
Factory Pay Rolls Up 30% Over Year Ago



Boston, Mass., April 11.—With the cost of living going up we find a general increase in factory wages. This increase in wages, together with greater employment, are boosting factory pay rolls which in February jumped 30 per cent over February of last year and were the highest for any month since April, 1930. While pay rolls were making this big gain, industrial production went up only 23 per cent.

Oil Production Sets New Peak In 1st Quarter

Value for Year Should Exceed 1926 Record of 1.425 Billion.

New York, April 11.—"A new record was set during the first quarter of 1937 by the oil industry, with production for the period totaling about 295,000,000 barrels, having an estimated value in excess of $360,000,000," J. Meyer, jr., & Co. stated today. This exceeded the Nation's oil output during the corresponding period in 1936 by 33,000,000 barrels, and represented an aggregate increase, this year, of approximately $65,000,000. In receipts of oil producers during the first three months.

"Sustainment of this 13 per cent production increase during the remainder of the year should result in a 1937 production of about 1,240,000,000 barrels," the company said. "On the basis of prevailing prices, this would lift the value of the year's production about $125,000,000 above the previous record of $1,425,000,000 attained in 1926.

"This would increase the returns of oil producers by about $400,000,000 over receipts in 1936, which was considered a prosperous year, and indicates that the oil industry now is enjoying one of the most profitable periods in its history."

Chain Store Sales.

New York, April 11.—Chain stores sales in March increased sharply over totals for the corresponding period of 1936. Adjusted to a seasonal basis with allowance for the Easter factor, however, the improvement last month was at a somewhat lesser rate than in February, according to the current review of March business issued by Chain Store Age.

O'Briens Stage Reception For Head of Gridiron Club

Several Hundred Newspapermen Attend Affair Given for Mr. and Mrs. Gould Lincoln; Famed Troupe Repeats Some Stunts.

By Dudley Harmon.

Mr. Robert Lincoln O'Brien, who used to be a newspaperman before becoming chairman of the Tariff Commission, entertained at a reception yesterday with Mrs. O'Brien for the president of the Gridiron Club and Mrs. Gould Lincoln. Several hundred newspapermen rubbed elbows with diplomats and officials at the party, held in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel. While invitations read "from 5 to 7," it was long after 8 before the last guest departed.

The Gridiron Troupe put on its act all over again, repeating the performance which they gave at their dinner Saturday evening. One of the most hilarious numbers was the ballet take-off on Ambassador Joseph Davies and one of the guests of the party was Miss Tatiana Gnoochef, who trained the members of the ballot in their paces.

A Former Editor.

Mr. O'Brien was at one time Washington correspondent of the Boston Transcript, later editor of that paper, and before assuming his present position he was editor and publisher of the Boston Herald. His son now is engaged in publishing the only newspaper on Cape Cod, Mass.

There were numerous Massachusetts people at yesterday's reception, including Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, wife of Senator Lodge; Representative Joseph Martin, also a newspaper publisher, and Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who wore a sable scarf with her black cloth coat. Mr. Oliver McKee, correspondent of the Boston Transcript, was accompanied by Mrs. McKee, and other Boston newspaper people there were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Groves. Mr. Groves had the leading role in one skit, and Mr. Henry Ehrlich, of the Boston Herald.

The Attorney General, Mr. Homer S. Cummings, was present to see himself satirized all over again in one of the skits—he also was at the dinner on Saturday. He was accompanied by Mrs. Cummings, who wore a spring print frock and a rose-colored felt hat.

Others Attending.

Others there were Mrs. Gifford Pinchot in a red wool suit and matching hat; Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Wilson; the Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy and Mrs. Heywood, the latter in a black wool frock; Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Miss Ruby Black and Mrs. Theodore Tiller from newspaper ranks; Mr. Oscar Crosby, up from Warrenton for the occasion; Representative and Mrs. Ralph Brewster, the latter in a print frock and silver fox; Mrs. McCook Knox and her brother, Mr. George McCook, of California, one of the stars of the national badminton tournament held recently in Chicago; Mrs. Hermann Gasch, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Stanley Reed, wife of the Solicitor General, and Miss Olivia Stokes.

Pouring tea during the afternoon were Mrs. Ernest G. Walker, Mrs. Mark Thistlethwaite, Mrs. Ulric Bell, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Edwin Gableman, Mrs. Charles Groves, Mrs. Byron Price, Mrs. George Holmes, Mrs. James L. Wright, Mrs. Clifford Berryman and Mrs. Walker Buel, of Cleveland.

THE MERRY-WHIRL

By Marylyn.

Always coming and going, this city's inhabitants never seem to stop roaming. It takes the "big season," with its galaxy of balls and parties, to begin to keep people from wandering about the countryside. Michal Budny, who in our estimation, is fast becoming the most widely traveled young chap in town (when he is here), has just returned from another trip of his. It was only a few weeks ago that he was returning from a sojourn in Florida, with a very enviable tan; now he has another one (tan), this time from the West Indies.

The young Polish diplomat is not the only one involved in traveling at this point. Ibrahim Seyfullah, of the Turkish Embassy, was up and out early Saturday morning, carefully stowing his bags in his car, filling it up with petrol and starting off for the South. He will be gone at least two months, and his destination is Mexico, that charming land of flowers, song and sparkling-eyed senoritas.

* * * *

Paris and New York and that more recent dictator of styles, Hollywood, had better look out, for Washington is fast sneaking up on them, judging from the clothes we have been seeing. Mrs. Clyde Williams, wife of the Representative from Missouri, is wearing one of the most fetching evening frocks this season. It is of gray net over taffeta. The waist is well fitted and is finished with a square neck. The skirt is very full and is embroidered with huge, bright poppies, beautifully worked in chenille. This same interesting design is repeated just below the neckline.

* * * *

* * * *

Try looking about you when driving downtown sometime. You'd be surprised at the number of friends you spot in nearby cars when waiting for the traffic light to change. It is a jolly game and we tried it the other morning. The first car we chanced to gaze into was being ably piloted by none other than Mrs. Peyton March. She was costumed in dark blue with an off-the-face hat and a soft gray fox collar framing her pretty smiling face.

At the very next corner, license No. 33 attracted us and curiously peering into the back of the limousine we saw Miss Mabel Boardman.

* * * *

Now for a few whirlographs on Eleanor Corby's small dance on Saturday evening for her sister, Mme. Franges:

The two hostesses standing in the wide hallway of their Chevy Chase home, Eleanor in a long, flowing gown of white chiffon made on Grecian lines, with a spray of gardenias tucked in the bodice, and her sister in gray chiffon, with trimmings of blue velvet.

Sidney's orchestra playing in the large drawing room, hung with tapestries, and with several small balconies opening out into the hallway on the second floor. Guests gathering in the breakfast room for highballs and champagne, and lounging on the comfortable sofas in the library, which is lined with books in rich, beautiful bindings.

Frau Blankenhorn, wife of the Third Secretary of the German Embassy, wearing a charming gown of white brocade with a low bodice. Other members of the diplomatic corps present: Mme. Popovici, wife of the former Secretary of the Rumanian Legation, who is sailing next month to join her husband in Bucharest; M. and Mme. Schlatter, of the Swiss Legation, the latter in a gown of heavy white crepe with a halter neck—and Mr. Joao de Deu Ramos, Secretary of the Portuguese Legation.

Others there were Mrs. Evatt Barnum, in a brocaded gown made from a Japanese obi, with trimmings of brown velvet; Mr. Jesse Reed, of Chicago, and Miss Elizabeth Thompson, of New York, a cousin of the Corby's, who is sailing soon to attend the coronation in London.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

The Girl He Loves Tells Falsehoods, Breaks Promises; 'Considerably Bothered,' Man Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About three years ago I met a young lady who was an invalid at the time, unable to walk. I found much pleasure in carrying her upstairs and down, to and from a car, and taking her for rides. Soon I learned to love her, and do to this day. However, she is 24 and I am 40. Is the difference in ages too great for satisfactory marriage? However, this side of our problem is not my main reason for writing.

* * * *

The young lady spent some time recuperating and about a year ago returned to work, and has worked continuously since. Considering our small salaries we get along fine and have had some most enjoyable times together. I was and am much in love with her and she appears to care as much for me. But above five months ago some sort of change seemed to come over her. She didn't act herself. I questioned her and she said she had not changed; at least, that she wasn't aware of it if she had, and so I dropped the subject.

* * * *

Before that, we had jointly owned an automobile, and about that time we bought a new one—in her name. I taught her to drive it and urged her to use it in driving to and from work, but with the understanding that she was not to carry anyone else with her. She agreed to this. Soon thereafter, however, she started carrying office associates with her to and from work. I reminded her of the condition and she said it would not happen again. But within two months a friend of mine told me he had seen her with several other persons in the car, and I learned on questioning her that she had taken several of the men in her office part way home. You can imagine this took about all the wind out of my sails, so to speak.

* * * *

Prior to this she had made the acquaintance of a girl co-worker known to be living with a man out of wedlock. I insisted that she should not associate with this couple and she promised she would not. But on Christmas Day, after promising me she was going to her home for Christmas dinner, she spent part of the day with this couple and other friends, while I was spending the day with my family in another section of the country. The knowledge of this deceit troubled me, and the other incident coming up shortly afterward made me skeptical.

* * * *

However, I tried to restore a feeling of confidence between us by telling her I didn't feel her office associates were her equals (considering things I had heard about their conduct) and she agreed with me. Finally she promised she would cease all association with this crowd. Then after a few weeks I find she is again associating with another group of co-workers, holding prolonged conversations with them and going to dinner with them. What I mean is, associating with different men while eating their dinners. This, I contend, will eventually lead to other things.

* * * *

I do not believe the girl has done anything morally wrong, other than to tell several falsehoods and break several promises, but I had warned her that the next time she associated with this crowd I would be through with her, and she could do as she saw fit from then on. I do not wish to be unreasonable, and I do not wish to hurt or harm her in any way, but I don't feel I can go on tolerating such actions.

* * * *

After all, I do love the girl and have gone so far as to broach some discussion of marriage, although this is definitely off now, as a result of her recent actions. Now she is making an effort to patch things up, by calling around to meet me after classes in the evening, and although I was easy in the past, I am determined that I am going to put her on her own from this time forth. I do not wish to incur her ill will, or create any hard feelings, but there is a limit to the conduct one can tolerate from a person her age.

* * * *

There is one other difficulty in our romance, and that is children. She wishes to have children while I, due to my age and because of economic reasons, feel we should not have children. However, you answered that type of problem most satisfactorily in your column on Tuesday, April 6. I shall appreciate your advice on my problem in the very near future. It is bothering me considerably. Respectfully yours, NEBUER.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR NEBUER: This whole relationship seems to be a hopelessly confused and undignified mess. The girl seems to be sadly lacking in character, certainly, but you appear to be equally lacking in that common sense one would expect in a man of your years. Since you have long known you loved her, why didn't you propose marriage to her months ago? She might not have accepted you, but at least you would have known where you stood with her. Judging from your story, she is only using you for "a good thing," so to speak.

* * * *

My advice to you is to stop playing the fool and bring this situation to order at once. Since the jointly owned car seems to be the cause of most of your troubles, get rid of it. Give the girl a chance to buy your half-interest in it, and if she isn't willing or financially able to do it, demand that the car be sold and the proceeds divided. Since the car is half yours, you are entitled to some voice concerning the use to which it may be put. But until the girl is your wife or your fiancee at least, you are not invested with the right to interfere in her personal life and relationships. The company she keeps is more or less her own business.

* * * *

Since you have found her to be a person of no integrity, it is not surprising that the friends she chooses are likewise undesirable. Birds of a feather usually flock together, and when and if you recover from your current infatuation, you will probably see that she is of about the same stripe as her companions whom you despise. Having given her fair warning that one more deception on her part would put an end to your friendship, I think the best thing you can do is make good that statement.

* * * *

I believe the sooner you have done with her, the better it will be for you. Considering the type of girl she is, I shouldn't advise your marrying her even though you were approximately the same age. Marriage would not remove her sneaking, cheating, lying tendencies. And 16 years' difference in ages, even between two persons of the highest type, is always a considerable handicap, which both must work constantly to overcome.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care The Post Woman's Page.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Our average humanity varies within quite narrow limits. In a herd we look very much alike as to size, height, weight and coloration. Any striking exception, such as a dwarf or a giant, creates immediate notice on the streets, unfortunately for the poor people who happen to be afflicted.

There is an interesting old book published about 50 years ago by Gould and Pyle, called "Anomalies and Curiosities of Medicine," which records all the exceptions to the general human rule. It is a little out of date, and I understand my friend, Dr. Morris Fishbein, is compiling a more modern record. The measurements today will probably be more accurate than they were in the days of Gould and Pyle.

Also Make Studies.

Another friend of mine, Dr. Charles Humberd, of Barnard, Mo., has been making some studies on anomalies. I have before me his record of the young schoolboy giant at Alton, Ill. This boy is now 18½ years old and is 8 feet 3¾ inches tall. Dr. Humberd says that his height exceeds that of every other documented case on record in medical literature. However, O'Brien, the Irish giant whose skeleton is in the Royal College of Surgeons, London, was 8 feet 4 inches in height, and John Middleton, born in 1752 in Lancashire, whose portrait is in Brasenose College, Oxford, measured 9 feet 3 inches. Perhaps Dr. Humberd does not consider these accurate, but it is hard to question so simple a thing as the measurement of height.

The Alton giant weighed 8½ pounds at his birth, and began to grow rapidly from infancy. He was 5 feet 4 inches tall at five years, and as tall as his father when he was 8½ years old. He never had any growing pains.

Life Complicated.

Life is very complicated for him. He naturally has to have clothes and shoes made especially. He has to have a special bed and armchair, but they seem too small for him. He cannot appear on the street or go to the movies without exciting more attention than the actors. The expense of being a giant, on account of these special clothes and furniture, is considerable. It is said that the boy at Alton makes his pocket money by posing for photographs. He is very resentful of his fate, for which nobody can blame him. He says, "It isn't my fault that I am this way," and "I didn't have anything to do with my getting to be like this."

The cause of his exceptional growth is undoubtedly an increase in the function of the pituitary gland. If such increase occurs before adolescence, it results in gigantism. If it occurs after normal growth has been completed, it results in a condition known as acromegaly, in which the bones of the hands, feet, jaw and face become enlarged. The appearance of this young man's face, compared with earlier photographs, would indicate that an acromegalizing process is beginning. He is, however, still growing, and there seems to be no indication that he will stop.

Editor's note—Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending ten cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of The Washington Post. The pamphlets are "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "Care of the Hair and Skin."

'Grumble Seat' Offered For Finicky Children

To break growing children with finicky appetites of making disparaging remarks about the food and menus, take a kitchen stool, paint the word "grumble" on it, and thereafter when any of the children are dissatisfied with the meal, they have to voice their views from the "grumble seat." You will soon find that they will taste before complaining and thus come to enjoy many new dishes they otherwise never would have eaten.

Sports Frocks—Wrinkle and Spot Proof

Plastics, one of the chemist's important developments, are featured in the white rayon crepe frock (left) with bright red plastic slide fasteners, and the scuffless heels of the T-strap shoes. Developments in the technique of printed rayon jersey have made possible patterns that are clearly defined and deeply colored, as will be noted at right. Both costumes shown at New York Museum of Science and Industry exhibition.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, April 11.

ONE THING that drives a girl daffy in this town is that the seasons disregard the calendar entirely, just as we read our morning papers at eight the previous evening. The spring clothes have been ogled and almost forgotten by the fashion reporters long before the first crocus rears its pretty head in Central Park; and while we are quietly dying of August humidity, the great fur sales of the year take place—opening invariably on a day so hot that the very sight of a sable wrap induces a stroke of apoplexy.

ALICE HUGHES

The same thing goes for toys, which the lady in private life usually begins considering about December 1. With spring in the air and bubbling in the brain, toy styles for the fall of 1937 have already been decided, and the tangible results cover seven acres of floor space at the annual toy fair now in progress here. There are 15,000 of them in this astonishing show—and it will do no good for Jane and Junior to shift their tastes in playthings ere the next visit from the plump old gentleman with the white whiskers. They'll get something out of these 15,000 samples, and like it.

As always, the toys mirror the times. For instance, trailers will be cluttering up thousands of living room floors next Christmas. Streamlined trains and the newer types of aircraft are hot numbers for Sonny, while those small girls who are not yet playing bridge at the age of 5 can get doll-babies with red fingernails, fancy halo coiffures and tear-ducts that really work, just like Mamma's. For all know, the stuffed infants also drink and smoke. And I find a happy thought in the fact that less than 1 per cent of the toys on show are the military type so popular with Eurpe's juvenile cannon-fodder. Time for that, alas, when the wonderful, awful bugles blow!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Among the new games I noted was one called "Top of the Town," neatly tied in with the big musical movie of that name, and playable by from four to seven people. It was thought up by an imaginative Hollywood gag-man named Floyd S. Cameron, whose letter-head reads, "In Business for Fun." I understand Floyd also accepts money orders and certified checks.

* * * *

With our World's Fair still over two years off, the lads in charge have already planned the uniform the girl guides will wear. These beauteous maidens will wear beige and black, with fashionable high pockets and detached yokes. All this, of course, subject to the inevitable fashion foibles of the next two years. I have a terrific yen for a concession at the fair here. I want to run a smart salon where weary women may come to have their screaming feet bathed, rubbed and rested. Maybe I can sneak that thought past the handsome Grover Whalen, who is head man of the show.

Chemistry Plays Important Role In Purchase of Milady's Gowns

Wrinkle-Proof and Water-Repellent Fabrics Now Widely Sought; Great Strides Reported in Rayon Yarns.

By Ethel Ehlen,

SUMMER CLOTHES buying has become a matter of chemistry as well as style correctness. "Is it washable?" now is supplanted by "Is it flame-proof, crush-resistant, spot and wrinkle proof, water-repellent and soft of texture?" At the recent duPont exhibition at the New York Museum of Science and Industry, Rockefeller Center, there was a deviation from the usual review of advanced styles in the fashion show—it accented the place which the products of the diversified chemical manufacturing industry now occupy in practically every phase of the style world. Materials, rather than lines, were the focal point of interest.

Up to only a few years ago, practically everything of importance in the fashion world owed its existence to natural products. Today the range of synthetic fabrics is almost limitless. There has been, for example, a most extraordinary development in making fabrics crease-resistant by means of a synthetic resin. The most delicate and luxurious fabrics, including velvet, have been made water-repellent, without any change in texture. This is achieved by a new chemical agent which seems to enter into the fiber itself, rather than forming a surface coating. In a similar manner, spot-proofing has been accomplished.

Rayon Important.

Rayons and the acetates now occupy an extraordinary place in style. The rayons are made from cellulose, which in the form of cotton and wood has been known for centuries. Chemical processes are used to develop the yarns which find wide application in the manufacture of a variety of fabrics. A recent development in the rayon field is the "thick and thin" yarn which has enabled designers to achieve effects not before possible with the ordinary rayon yarns. Another interesting thing about the newest rayons is that they are developed in various degrees of luster, from shiny to extremely dull fabrics. Some of the rayons are spun and woven like cotton, either alone or mixed with natural textile fabrics, such as wool and mohair.

Cellophane, which is chemically identical with viscose yarn (rayon), started out to serve as a transparent wrapping material, but now is found in millinery and dress materials; it is also extensively used for curtains and over-drapes for practically every room in the house. New bleaching processes give to many of the synthetic materials a snow-like whiteness not attainable by natural products, and which does not yellow with age. Flame-proofing, by use of a new chemical, does not affect the texture or wearing properties of any of the materials; the textiles are not fireproof in the sense that they cannot be burned, but are flameproof in that they do not blaze or smolder, and accordingly will not spread a fire. One of the final steps in textile finishing is the treating of fabrics to impart a soft and pleasing texture.

New Synthetic Colors.

No longer are textile manufacturers dependent upon natural dyestuffs—saffron, sumac, Tyrian purple and the like, which covered only a limited range of colors, and in many cases, were dull and not fast to light or laundering. Out of the chemist's test tubes has come a complete rainbow of bright, fast hues and tints. Today, there are literally hundreds of synthetic dyestuffs which are used on all kinds of textiles—rayon, cotton, silk, wool and linen.

In view of the fact that practically every phase of the style has been improved either by the revolutionary changes worked in natural products by chemical applications, or in the presentation of materials which are purely the result of chemical laboratories, manufacturers believe that a great change is taking place in the materials available to mankind. In other words, they believe that the chemical manufacturing industry of America has made possible, style effects and new fabrics which have made for higher standards and more exquisite effects.

Tailored Jackets Used.

Paris (U.P.).—Many of the evening gowns are worn with tailored jackets which make them sufficiently informal for cocktail or dinner wear. In yellow crepe or wool, these gowns are particularly effective. Some of the dress bodices are made with yokes of black lace ending in high collars which show above the collar of the evening jacket.

Understand Your Dreams

SOMETIMES dreams come true. A girl in a beauty contest dreamed that she won. She did. But—half the girls in the contest had similar dreams. Plainly only one of these wish-fulfillment dreams could come true.

A schoolgirl whose family can't afford the fine clothes she loves dreams she's dressed in splendor. Her dream probably will come true. When she earns her own money, she'll skimp on lunches, forego small pleasures, to spend every cent on the luxurious clothes she craves.

Often we ourselves make our fear dreams come true. A student working on term examinations sees himself falling off a cliff. His unconscious mind is saying, "I'm going to fall"—so he does.

Do you dream wild animals are leaping at you? The animals are only symbols. Think! What is it you fear? Debts? "Nerves?" Face the facts, adjust yourself to meet the circumstances, keep fear dreams from coming true.

Some dreams are an escape, show our unwillingness to face reality. A girl postpones her marriage because of interfering relatives. She pictures herself and her fiance on a desert isle. "If only there were no one to interfere, we'd be happy," she says in her sleep. Instead of bucking the relatives and going through with marriage, she chooses this easier, but unsatisfactory way of finding happiness in a dream.

Dreams tell you things about yourself you never knew before. Our 40-page booklet, "Interpreting Your Dreams," gives typical dreams, meaning of dream symbols, puts you wise to the working of your sleeping mind.

Send 15c for our booklet, "Interpreting Your Dreams," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

THE GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Pursuit of a Print.

YOU WAKE UP with a happy sense of impending adventure. This is the day you are going to buy a new dress—a print, something gay, colorful, springlike. Yet also smart and distinctive. You vision yourself at the Twitter tea Thursday dashing and Vogue-like. Your friends exclaim, "What a darling dress!" Your enemies eye you with new respect.

* * * *

You enter your favorite shop, find yourself in a crepe and chiffon flower garden. How will you ever be able to choose from so many enchanting dresses? The saleswoman holds up a coral splashed with mauve chrysanthemums. How lovely! What exquisite colors! You slip it on, advance to the mirror expectantly. What has happened? Where are you? Only the mauve chrysanthemums remain. You have vanished!

You try a coronation blue spattered with scrolls and crowns . . . a brown with orange and green tomatoes . . . a mustard with brown sheaves of wheat. Still you cannot find yourself. Some witch must have waved a wand.

A black and white is suggested. You will have none of it. You are determined to be young and gay this spring. And colorful. Aren't all the men saying they're tired of many dark clothes on women?

* * * *

At the next shop half a dozen charming frocks are hung before you. Which shall you try first? You decide on a soft rose with varicolored nosegays. Surely it will transform you into a Southern belle. But no! The reflection in the mirror is that of a visiting sightseer from Cottonwood Junction. You try a beige with green crocodiles, a design "everybody is wearing on the Riviera," and fade further into nothingness. You give up and try a navy and white and find yourself the ghost of the last ten women you met.

* * * *

You visit half a dozen more stores with the same result, finally get desperate and invade an exclusive shoppe. After all, if you could just once find a dress you were crazy about, you would be willing to get a loan on your insurance.

"Have you any prints that are distinctive?" you ask the grand duchess who receives you.

"Just the design for travel, Modom," she explains. "Now on a cruise——"

You ask for a design for humidity. She brings you a sleeveless segment of the rainbow. "Now for resort wear, Modom——"

"Show me something in black and white," you say grimly.

You try on a checkered effect with a surplice closing and confront in the mirror your grandmother in her favorite wrapper. "Now with a little vest——" But no! You demand more splash. Your receptionist presents one that flaunts a deep-sea garden. You wave it aside. Then, oh joy! You see what you believe to be the answer to your prayer in a corner. "We do not have that in your size, Modom," you are told with finality.

Footsore, you limp along the street wondering where to go next. Surely there is a print for you somewhere! You see other women in beautiful and becoming prints. The girl just ahead—where on earth did she get that clever little ensemble with the cape? There is another woman, her open coat displaying the dress you have dreamed about. Why is it that other people always look so marvelous in prints? Can it be that you are a marked woman?

You try a new frontier—a popular priced misses' department. Racks upon racks of color and blossom. Ah, here must be your pot of gold! You descend on the racks with the zeal of a forty-niner. You hold up this dress and that—thistle with coral roses, turquoise with gold geraniums, brown with flaming nasturtiums, chartreuse with daisies, dubonnet with daisies, navy blue with daisies, citron with daisies. They begin to dissolve in a mist of color. Is this one black or blue, that mauve or purple?

You think of the tea and become frantic. You must get something—anything. After all, maybe one dress is as good—— Suddenly you get a grasp on yourself and flee.

* * * *

You are back in your first shop—the crepe and chiffon flower garden. You collapse in a chair. "Show me something in a dark sheer," you say, "or maybe a summer cotton—SOLID COLOR."

Low Crowns Feature New Large-Sized Hats

Paris (AP).—The new large hats are sensational in size. Their brims are wide in front and back, fluted in various places and often dipped with striking irregularities. Some of them are mushroom-shaped. All have low crowns.

"Grand Passion" is the name of one large straw model, romantically veiled in black and accented with black velvet ribbon. Claude Monet's name is borrowed for a pale gray straw chapeau with a huge orange poppy in front whose stem bands the crown.

Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937

By Bob Burns.

I've read a lot of books on how to be a success in business, but I never read one yet that was written by a man that had a business. I may be wrong, but I imagine if a man is makin' a success of his business, he's too busy to write a book.

I was sittin' on the river bank down home one time and I overheard two bums talkin'. They compared notes and found out that both of 'em had formerly run the same kind of a business—only in differ'nt towns and they had both failed. One of 'em said: "My chief trouble was that I wouldn't take advice from anybody." The other one put his hand out and said, "Shake, brother, I took advice from everybody."

Idea

Some time ago the combination of wings in the daily life of Mary Foley Benson engaged us. The combination was apparent and striking, for she is an aviatrix and wears silver wings on her coat lapel; also, she is an artist in Agriculture's employ and her daily chore is the drawing of butterflies, mostly, butterflies with a colorful luxury of wings. And from her drawing board she can see through big windows that almost constantly frame the wings of a gipsying airplane. There was the combination of wings on the drawing board and wings through the window and wings on the coat lapel • • •

This combination of wings in her daily life hadn't previously occurred to the artist-aviatrix. But now, she says, it's quite compelling and out of it an idea has sprouted: She intends soon to offer, under her own individual arrangement, an art exhibition on the wings theme. This exhibition would show the work she has done on butterflies, and the work is as interesting as it is prolific. • • •

Furthermore, the coloring and lines of the butterflies she would exhibit would certainly be in more truth than some of the printed lines about butterflies have been. In most writing, the butterfly has been an adornment badly misplaced and described; it was notoriously handled in one popular work of several years ago, the author having what were obviously native South American butterflies flitting across the American meadows for the delight of American children and otherwise making the butterfly out for what it isn't. • • •

Just now, the artist-aviatrix has an entry in the Metropolitan State art contest. This is a watercolor of two cecropia moths and of such work she hopes to form her own exhibition of wings.

Reflection

There is change of method in everything these days and so the methods surrounding a "trade" or "swap" must inevitably come to change. Not so many years ago a "trade" or "swap" would involve two or more men, and perhaps two or more horses, and two or more men and perhaps two or more lots. It would involve mouth to mouth talk and the whittling on some soft sticks of wood and, in many instances, the passing around of a bottle to drive the deal.

But now, it appears you can make a very satisfactory swap by mail. Often there come letters from Government employes in far-flung places seeking contact with some other Government employes who might want to swap jobs. This is certainly an evolution in the methods of the "swap," and, all changes in life and living in the Republic being of interest, one of the letters is quoted:

"I believe I have something to offer which would prove attractive to a great number of Government employes with present headquarters in Washington. I desire to trade a permanent general clerical, procurement in particular, clerkship CAF-3, 1,620.00 per annum held in Southern California for a grade CAF-4 (general clerical, typist, statistical, supervisory, file) in Washington, D. C. In this connection, however, I would appreciate my name being withheld publicly."

Now, this is certainly without the traditional American backdrop of the "swap" when men whittled on sticks, spat of tobacco juice, consumated the deal with a drink of honest corn and went home in confidence that they had palmed off, once and for all, a thoroughly useless and no good mare.

A reminder from the F. C. A.: Any letters affecting personnel written in any division should be cleared through the personnel office for initialing of file copy before being sent to the vise section • • • Letters of indorsement or application or those pertaining to records of former or present employes should not be answered in the various operating divisions but should be referred to the personnel office in the first instance.

The series of bingo games, which have featured the monthly meetings of War Department Federal Employes Union 261 with first, second and third ladies' prizes for the series going to Mrs. Gertrude Chaney (Air Corps), Bertha Tyler (Soldiers' Home) and Alice Fleischmann (National Guard), respectively • • • All of the men's prizes for the series went to representatives of the Soldiers' Home. They were: Robert F. Donaldson, Vincent Sgueo and Fred J. Leonberger, who held first, second and third places in the order named.

Survey Calls For Extension Of Parkway

Resources Committee's Report Favors Route to Great Falls.

Use of C. & O. Canal, Study of Population Also Urged.

Extension of the George Washington Memorial Parkway from Washington to Great Falls, and the use of the abandoned Chesapeake & Ohio Canal as a recreation waterway from Washington to Point of Rocks, at a cost of $9,100,000, were recommended by the National Resources Committee to Congress in a report released yesterday.

The report, concerned with detailed recommendations for the development of 118 drainage basins throughout the country, supplemented the report on public works planning which President Roosevelt transmitted to Congress on February 3.

Additional extensions of this parkway system to the Skyline Drive at Harpers Ferry and up Monocacy Creek toward Gettysburg Battlefield, were urged by the committee in the development of the Potomac River region. An increase in the low water flow of the Potomac was recommended "to enhance the beauty of Great Falls and facilitate recreational boating on the river."

Population Cited.

However, in the direct recommendations for the area, the steady and rapid population-increase in the important residential section around Washington was stressed as basis for immediate study of means to secure an additional water supply.

This was coupled with specific projects for a basin-wide program of pollution-control in conjunction with flood control, navigation and power development, with study and preparation for such a program to cost at least $300,000.

The report emphasized the potential water power of the Potomac and its tributaries as of "great magnitude," but stated that considerable further investigation must be made to determine the "plan and program that would afford maximum benefits. Such studies should include the correlation of proposed flood-control measures included in the flood control act of 1936 with proposed storage reservoirs, the abatement of pollution, the promotion of recreation, the effects of joint operation of reservoirs for flood control and power use, the costs of power, and the power market in a co-ordinated transmission system covering the metropolitan area of the Middle Atlantic States."

Channel Favored.

A major recommendation for immediate work in Virginia reiterated in the new report, was expenditure of $1,186,000 to dredge a 25-foot channel from Hopewell to Richmond.

The report recommended a Statewide survey of Virginia to collect basic data necessary for the development of water use. The survey would include studies of stream pollution, surface run-off, and underground water supplie in the lower Chesapeake and other areas.

The Potomac basin projects listed for construction at an "indeterminate time" included water supply systems for Ashburn, Bluemont, Boyce, Churchville, Clifton, Dumfries, Greenville, Grottoes, Hamilton, Haymarket, Keezletown, Lincoln, Lovettsville, McCaheysville, Middletown, Mount Crawford, Occoquan, Stephens City, The Plains, Toms Brook, Upperville, Vienna and Waterford, at an estimated cost of $637,000, and sewer systems for Ashburn, Bluemont, Boyce, Bridgewater, Churchville, Clifton, Greenville, Grottoes, Hamilton, Haymarket, Keezletown, Kinsale, Lincoln, Lovettsville, McCaheysville, Middletown, Mount Crawford, Occoquan, The Plains, Toms Brook, Upperville and Waterford at a cost of $638,000.

Among the projects most needed in the lower Chesapeake Bay area, embracing the Rappahannock and York River basins, the report said, are drainage for mosquito control, installation of sewers and sewage treatment plans and navigation improvements.

Pollution of streams in that area is not yet serious, the report said, but a number of towns are without suitable sewer and sewage treatment facilities.

Houghton Gives $400 for Fellowship

Before sailing for England Saturday, Alanson B. Houghton, former United States Ambassador to Great Britain and a member of the advisory committee for the Hall of Nations, a unit of the graduate school of American University, presented Dr. Ellery C. Stowell, its director, with a check for $400 to be used toward a fellowship from England.

The committee, of which Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of State, is chairman, is working on a plan for fostering better relations between the United States and other countries by bringing oustanding graduate students and educators in the social sciences from all parts of the world to Washington for a year or more of study through the medium of fellowships and professorships. National committees for each of the 54 nations having diplomatic representation in this country are being formed, one of its purposes being the establishment of these fellowships.

As the first step in launching its campaign for fellowships, the committee sponsored the Hall of Nations recently held here in Washington. At this function, Stimson drew the names of Czechoslovakia and Nicaragua, the two countries from which fellows will come next year to study. Finland and Colombia were the alternates. The gift of Houghton, together with other sums to be contributed, assures a British fellowship next fall.

Girl of 16 Dies From Injuries In Auto Crash

Succumbs at Hospital to Fracture of Skull After Cars Collide.

Barbara Waugh, 16, of 705 Otis street northwest, was the victim She died of a fractured skull yesterday afternoon. Three other persons suffered injuries in the early morning crash which threw one automobile into a ditch.

The girl was riding with her mother, Mrs. Marion Waugh, 35, in a taxicab operated by George Heflin, 23, of 531 Fifth street southeast, when it struck a car driven by Frank Shorter, 34, Silver Hill, Md., police said.

Heflin's cab was overturned and knocked off the road. He sustained lacerations to his head and shock. Mrs. Waugh escaped with slight cuts. A fourth passenger in the car, Edith Hall, 26, of 615 Fifteenth street northeast, received cuts to her head and face. Shorter was not hurt.

Prince Georges County police were investigating the accident last night and no arrests had been made. An inquest will be held probably Tuesday.

Patsy Frank, 7-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Frank, 4503 Thirteenth street northwest, was seriously injured yesterday afternoon when she was struck by an automobile outside of her home.

The child was attracted to the curb when two automobiles collided. A few minutes later a third automobile struck her. She was taken to Walter Reed Hospital, where it was said she had suffered a probable skull fracture and cuts on her legs.

Police said the driver of the car was Paul Himmelfarb, 58, of 4715 Sixteenth street northwest.

G. W. U. Publication Again Wins Student Editorial Page Award

'The Hatchet' Captures Cup Second Time in Middle Atlantic States Competition for College Press.

The Hatchet, George Washington University's weekly, still has the best editorial page of any student newspaper in the Middle Atlantic States.

Reposing in the editorial workshop of The Hatchet at 700 Twelfth street northwest last night was a silver loving cup to prove this. The cup was awarded The Hatchet at the convention of the Intercollegiate Newspaper Association of the Middle Atlantic States, held last week-end in Philadelphia.

Not only was this a triumph for George Washington, but it was a vindication of women in journalism. The editor of The Hatchet is Margaret Davis, of the Class of '37. She is 20 years old and lives at 5 Rhode Island avenue.

In addition to winning first prize in the editorial page contest at Philadelphia, The Hatchet was in a tie with Temple University's News in the competition for the best handling of news and general makeup. First prize in this went to Gettysburg College and second prize to Lehigh University.

It was the second time the Hatchet had won first prize for the best editorial page, the cup having first come into its possession at a convention of the same association last fall.

Miss Davis said last night that, upon her graduation in June she expects to go into the newspaper business—"if I can get a job."

The associate editors of the Hatchet are Edmund Browning, Howard W. Ennes, jr., Robert W. Howell and Winfield Rankin. The senior staff members are William Coburn, John Daugherty, Frances Humphrey, Howard Mace and Annette Rich. The business manager is Bernard Holden.

Safety Move Made At Glen Echo Park

Glen Echo Park, Washington's free admission outdoor amusement park, is collaborating with the War Department on safety measures, in front of the park on Conduit road when the 1937 season opens next Saturday.

The War Department, through surveys in 1936, find that by allowing parking directly in front of Glen Echo it makes motoring hazardous on Conduit road, and in order to protect lives at this junction they have placed guard fences and signs telling the patrons of Glen Echo Park where to park and where not to.

The management of Glen Echo Park is in sympathy with this proposal to the extent that they are making their auto parking area, that will accommodate approximately 1,000 cars and which in previous years was a paid parking area, into a free parking lot for the pleasure seekers of Washington and vicinity. There is an entrance directly from this parking lot to the park.

Historic Paper Returned to File

Charlottesville, Va., April 11.—Following proceedings instituted in a New York court by Commonwealth's Attorney William O. Fife, of this city, the 147-year-old marriage bond of Thomas Jefferson's daughter, Martha, and former Gov. Thomas Mann Randolph, alleged to have been stolen from the Albemarle County Courthouse, has been returned to the files of the Circuit Court here.

Barnet J. Beyer, New York antique dealer, contended that he purchased the marriage bond in good faith. However, the complaint filed by Fife stated that the bond was sold in a New York gallery in 1931 for $190, of which F. G. Dawson, 60-year-old attorney of Charlottesville, received $140.50.

Dawson was convicted here February 12, 1936, by Judge J. Callan Brooks, and sentenced to two years for the theft of four documents from the circuit clerk's office.

Sentence was suspended after acceptance of a written statement by two local physicians which stated Dawson "cannot do hard work and confinement in jail would probably be detrimental to health without close medical supervision."

Hamilton Bank Aide Is Seized In Funds Theft

Robert A. Sisson, 30, Held in $5,000 Bond as He Admits Shortage.

Arrest of Robert A. Sisson, 30, assistant cashier of the Hamilton National Bank, on a charge of misapplication of the bank's funds, was announced yesterday by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Sisson was arrested Saturday just after the bank closed, it was learned. He was accused specifically of the misapplication of $750 on March 31, 1936; arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage, pleaded guilty and was released on bond of $5,000.

Last night Sisson told a reporter that he had first taken the bank's money to meet the needs of his family when he lost funds in the bank closures of 1933. He said he had tried and intended to return the money but had not been able to get the amount together.

The assistant cashier, a graduate of McKinley High School and a local banking school, has admitted irregularities of several thousand dollars, according to the Bureau of Investigation.

Sisson had been employed at the bank since 1933. His home is at 101 North Brook Lane, Bethesda, Md. He is married and has three children, aged 9 years, 5 years, and 7 weeks.

Needy Given $20,000 By De Paul Society

More than $20,000 was spent in assisting the poor and needy of the District by the 28 parish conferences of the St. Vincent de Paul Society during the last three months, it was announced yesterday by George J. Cleary, president.

Speaking before 400 delegates from parish conferences at the quarterly meeting at Chaplin's Restaurant, 1219 G street northwest, Cleary announced that in addition to the regular relief work a committee of the society was discussing and working over cases rejected by the various assistance divisions of the Social Security Board.

Gerald A. Gleason, assistant district attorney from Pennsylvania, was the guest speaker at the breakfast which followed early mass at St. Dominic's Church. Two Representatives and numerous churchmen also were in attendance.

Day Workers Ask Blanton To Fight Cut

Former Treasury Watchdog May Fight District Economy Move.

Former Representative Thomas L. Blanton, once Congress' most zealous Treasury watchdog, may appear on Capitol Hill this week as champion of 3,000 District per diem workers who, as the result of an economy provision in the 1938 District appropriation bill, are in danger of being robbed of all annual, sick and holiday leave.

The provision says that these per diem workers shall be paid only for the actual time worked. And that, as they interpret it, means the end of all leave with pay and reduces them to the status of stepchildren in the local personnel picture.

The only difference between many of these per diem workers and the annual workers is that they are paid by the day. Some of them have worked day in and day out for the District most of their lives. For many years they were given only 15 days annual leave, while other workers were given 30 days leave and 15 days sick leave.

When the Federal economy act was knocked out, the per diem workers were given the same leave privileges as the annual employes—26 days' annual leave and 15 days' sick leave.

Who is to blame for the provision which they say would take this leave away for them is not clear. Members of Congress blamed the District Commissioners.

A group of per diem workers Saturday called on Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, who is in charge of the District appropriation bill on his side of the Capitol. He expressed surprise that such a provision had been written into the bill, and told the group to appear when hearings on the bill start this week, probably Wednesday.

The group has sought to retain former Representative Blanton to lead the fight for them. He is expected to give them their answer this morning.

Laborer Kills Himself By Leaping Into Fire

Medina, N. Y., April 11 (AP).—Coroner David Fraser said tonight that Charles Wienke, 56, laborer, apparently had built a fire of his outer clothing and jumped into it to commit suicide. Wienke died in a hospital here today and Fraser said he would issue a certificate of death by suicide.

Doctor Holds Cancer Hard To Recognize

Groover Less Optimistic Than Others at Town Hall Meeting.

A morbid hush fell over the Town Hall audience at the Shoreham last night as Dr. Thomas A. Groover, a member of the panel, prepared to answer one of America's most urgent medical questions:

"How can we tell whether we have concer?" a member of the audience had asked.

"Internal cancers, in many cases, have run one-half their lives before being recognizable," he replied. "Furthemore, results of treatment in a large number of instances have not been successful."

More encouraging, however, on the subject of cancer were Dr. Howard W. Haggard, the speaker, and Dr. Daniel L. Borden, another member of the discussion panel.

Dr. Haggard declared inheritance was not a dominating factor in contraction of the disease, and Dr. Borden stated cancer in its first stage can, as a rule, be cured.

In his address, which preceded the questions and panel discussions, Dr. Haggard, associate professor of applied physiology in Yale University, condemning the country for not keeping abreast of developments in medicine, declared a system of "medical propaganda" was greatly needed.

"For instance," he said, "we have magnificent methods of curing and controlling many diseases, but we cannot induce people to come and be cured. Moreove, only since the beginning of the year have papers dared to use the words 'venereal diseases' in their headlines.

"Why," he asked, "should people retreat from reality?"

During the discussion, Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer and member of the panel, asked what method should be used to give the public medical information.

Dr. Haggard replied that legitimate medical cures should be advertised like "toothpaste." He added, however, there was no money available for such advertising.

"The physician of today," he declared, 'is not, as Benjamin Rush was, a social leader. He fails to push himself to the front. He is conservative. It is the doctor's fault that medical propaganda is remiss."

Sharkey Bows to Buddy Bowie in Prep Invitation Final

This Morning

Pitcher for Opener Worries Harris.

By Shirley Povich.

Come the afternoon of April 19, Mr. Bucky Harris will have to make a decision which, while it may not materially affect the tranquillity of nations or reshape the course of world events, is nevertheless mighty important to the Washington ball team.

On that day, Manager Harris must choose the Nats' opening-game pitcher and although no ceremonies attend such a decision, Mr. Harris, even now, nine days in advance of the date, is very much given to fretting over the name he will insert at the bottom of the line-up.

POVICH.

Because, there is a situation on the Washington Club this season as the inaugural game approaches, and Harris was ever the one to use tact. He has three, possibly four choices, and thus far he has given no inkling of his intentions. And the possibility is great that even Mr. Harris himself has come to no private decision in the matter.

* * * *

DeShong Deserves Honor

Jimmy DeShong, as the team's leading pitcher last season, apparently deserves the honor; and pitchers really do count the opening game assignment an honor.

* * * *

Grizzled Pete Appleton who failed to win as many games as DeShong last year but whose earned run average was far better, can claim the honor on that basis and even Harris wouldn't dispute him.

* * * *

Buck Newsom was given the assignment last year and blithely expects to get it again, and Mr. Harris would dislike very much to disappoint the big fellow.

* * * *

Weaver Feels Fit

Harris might be able to dismiss DeShong as the opening-game hurler on the basis of DeShong's comparative mediocre perforamnces in the exhibition games, but if he were to choose his pitcher purely from a standpoint of readiness and physical fitness he must give his vote to Appleton—or mayhap, Monte Weaver.

* * * *

Weaver's come-back has, in fact, confused the situation a great deal more. The professor whose displays on the mound have been almost too good to be true and have been causing Harris to pinch himself to reassure him that Weaver's pitching has been no dream.

* * * *

Weaver and Appleton, on form, are unquestionably the Nats' best pitchers at this writing. In comparison, the others—DeShong and Newson—have been bums, and Harris if he follows the form book will name one of the first-named pair.

* * * *

Faith in Appleton

But the Nats' manager will consider the situation most carefully. He would like to give the assignment to DeShong, his mainstay of last year, as a reward for that work; he unquestionably has faith in the reliable Appleton; he would like to provide Monte Weaver with the whole-hearted confidence he thinks that fellow needs, and he may not think it wise to cross up Newsom.

* * * *

Big Newsom wants the assignment—badly. He thinks he's the best pitcher on the club and it has been a fetish with him to get those opening-day jobs. He boasts that he has pitched the opening game for whichever big league club he has been with without a lapse and cites his defeat by Mel Harder in a 2-1, 16-inning game in 1935 as the only opener he ever lost.

* * * *

Harris cannot discount, either, Newsom's opening-game display of 1936 when he turned in the best-pitched effort of the season by any Washington pitcher. That was the day he beat Lefty Gomez and the Yankees, 1 to 0, allowing only four hits.

Newsom Wants It!

That was the day, too, that Newsom was all but knocked unconscious in the fifth inning when hit

Nats Spank Farm Club Again, 5-3

Lanahan and Appleton Yield Five Hits Despite Cold.

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 11.—The Nats ended a pleasant three-day stay at their country place here by slapping down their Chattanooga farmhands for the third straight time. It was, as the saying goes, just a breeze.

Grizzled Pete Appleton and young Dick Lanahan city-slicked the Nats' country cousins with some five-hit pitching, and the main office of the Griffith firm won the ball game by the close but satisfactory score of 5 to 3.

Big Freddie Sington was no drawback to the Nats, either. The giant outfielder, who was inserted into the Nats' line-up as an added attraction for Chattanooga fans who knew him last year as their own big-shot star, rapped out three hits and was a potent figure in the Nats' first four runs.

About 1,000 apparently baseball-mad fans turned out for the exhibition, braving the biting cold and pneumonia ridden blasts. It was a flattering tribute to baseball's grip on some people, but otherwise a very foolish idea.

Off and on, the Chattanooga fellows were making a hit off Appleton during the six innings he worked, but they were making only two runs. He gave up two of the four hits he allowed in the second inning when the Lookouts scored twice.

Dick Lanahan was rather merciless to his former minor league pals here. In the three innings he toiled he permitted only one hit and that blow was a cheap affair by Wasdell, who bounced a single off Lanahan's glove into the unprotected territory between the mound and second base.

But to get back to the beginning, the Nats met up with big, right-handed Harry Kelley, on the mound for Chattanooga, and after a harmless first inning they began to prod Kelley for some runs.

Sington rammed a stinging double to leftfield and the wild-chucking Kelley then filled the bases by walking Stone and Travis. At this point Buddy Myer singled sharply into rightfield and two runs came clattering home. That 2-0 lead of the Nats was wiped out almost immediately when the 'Noogans reared up against Appleton in their half of the inning.

The pesky Jimmy Wasdell thumped a double into right center and Senor Bobby Estallela, the little copy cat, did the same thing to score Wasdell. Appleton, apparently upset at this turn of affairs, walked the next pair of hitters and the Lookouts had one run across with the bases still full and none out. But they got only one more run out of the proceedings. That crossed the plate while Joe Kuhel was retiring Jake Early at first.

They almost scored a third run on Kelley's short grounder down the third-base line, but Bloodworth, who attempted to cross the plate on the play, was met by a large committee comprised of Shanty Hogan, who was waiting for him with Appleton's throw.

Sington Breaks Tie.

Matters didn't stand at 2-2 long. Lewis opened the next inning with a single and two were on base with none out when Wasdell made a wild chuck attempting to force Lewis at second on Kuhel's grounder. Kuhel galloped to second on the error and Sington banged both runners across the plate with a nice, long single to right.

They picked up another run off Kelley in the first and made it 5-2, with Sington launching the inning with a single and ultimately scoring on Johnny Mihalic's single. After that the Nats met up with a large party named Frank Petticolas in the box for the Lookouts and they couldn't score any more.

Sington's Chase Fails.

Chattanooga had encountered six scoreless innings before it scored its last run—in the ninth. That was made without benefit of a base hit when Pinch-hitter Olivares walked

The Favorite Is Merely a Spectator as Buddy Bowie Receives Prep Trophy

St. Albans Student Upsets Gonzagan

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

In a continuance of the upset theme that marked the entire tournament, Buddy Bowie, 17-year-old St. Alban's prep student, knocked the Georgetown Prep Invitation crown from the shoulders of Defending Champion Buddy Sharkey by the decisive score of 4 and 3 yesterday at Garrett Park.

Playing near-par golf around the Little Hoya's layout, Bowie assumed an early lead of 4 up and coasted in over Sharkey's poorest round of the three-day affair. Bowie needed three pars for a 73 when the match ended on the fifteenth green; Sharkey was 8 over par.

Receiving 5 points for his final-round berth and a like number for the victory, Bowie also carried away the team crown for St. Alban's with 8½ points. Gonzaga was second with 16, and the hosts third with 15. St. John's, with 7½, and Devitt and Landon followed with 2 each.

Wins First Hole.

Bowie narrowly escaped defeat in the semifinals. Jack Dettweiler boasted a 2-up margin through the seventh hole, only to lose the next two, squaring the match at the turn, and succumbng to Bowie's putter on the second trip around the course. Sharkey turned in a 7-and 6 win over Dick Canning, of the host school, to enter the finals.

Bowie gave indication of what was to come by nearly holing out a public approach on the first hole, Sharkey conceding the putt. After halving the second in pars, the eventual winner won the next three holes with pars, the defending champ falling into misfortune on each hole.

Sharkey reduced the margin to 3 up by winning the seventh with a par and holed a 14-footer for a birdie on the short eighth hole, but that ended his comeback, two holes short of squaring the match. Bowie rounded the turn 3 up, winning the next hole after Sharkey was stymied by a bush.

With intermittent showers falling, in addition to occasional snow and wind squalls, the prepsters found difficulty playing and took buzzard fives on the first two holes of the second nine.

The defending champion parred the twelfth but lost it right back to the winner's birdie 3 on the thirteenth, and after halving the next hole in pars Sharkey lost his last chance for a rally by missing a 4-foot putt for a halve on the fifteenth hole

Putting Decides.

Bowie's accuracy with his putter, a club that threw Sharkey down when he needed it badly for the first time in the tourney, was the deciding point of the match. Both linksmen played equal from tee to green.

The victory was Bowie's second in two years, the Columbia Club junior title going to the slender stroker last year. The defeat broke Sharkey's two-year dominancy of the event, the stocky Gonzagan annexing the medal and trophy last year and winning the medal last Wednesday with a record-tying 66.

St. Alban's victory in the team event is the school's first in the eight-year history of the tournament. Bowie received 3½ points for his 73, runner-up to the medalist, and 5 points each for gaining the semifinals, finals and winning the event. It was the first time a "one-man team" has carried off the school trophy.

Feller Gets It!

Bob, Strikeout King, Gets Hit for 'Real' Homer.

By the Associated Press.

Little Rock, Ark., April 11.—Bob Feller, sensational young Cleveland hurler, today fell victim to the bane of all pitchers when he was touched for a home run with the bases full.

This enabled the Little Rock Travelers, of the Southern Association, to blank the Cleveland Indians, 5 to 0, before 5,600 spectators.

It was the first time in 18 innings in the grapefruit circuit that Feller had been scored upon. The 18-year-old strike-out king fanned seven batters in the three innings he worked today.

There were two out in the third inning, with the bases loaded, when Jim Tabor, a rookie infielder fresh from the University of Alabama diamond, caught hold of a fast ball and drove it far over Earl Averill's head in centefield, to score a home run standing up.

Pop Warner 'Tired.'

Philadelphia, April 11.—Glenn S. (Pop) Warner, Temple football coach who has been tutoring grid teams for 42 years, plans to retire "sometime within the next four years" if his current squad turns out to be good.

14 Scholastic Tilts Booked For the Week

Three Inter-High Baseball Games Listed; Two Tomorrow.

Spring sports take a firm hold on Washington's high and prep schools this week, calling for 14 baseball, track and tennis contests, including three inter-high games. Two of the latter occur tomorrow, thanks to the monopoly held by Roosevelt High's cadets on the Roosevelt athletic field.

Tech and Wilson must play their postponed Friday game tomorrow instead of today since the cadets are marching on the field this afternoon. This means two inter-high games will be going on at the same time, Western and Central playing at Central. Cadet authorities were unconvinced, however, by this argument.

The Central-Western conflict finds the latter opening defense of its championship. The Georgetowners are rather heavily favored to keep it, incidentally, despite a 5-3 defeat suffered last week from Washington-Lee High.

In the third inter-high scrap, Eastern and Tech collide at Eastern, with Tech apparently stronger than it has been since it won the championship in 1933.

The week's program opens today, with Central meeting the Georgetown Freshmen on the Hilltop. Eastern opens Wednesday against Washington-Lee at Eastern Stadium.

Top Field Boasted In Amateur Boxing

Boston, April 11 (AP).—The best of this year's amateur boxers, 221 of them from 25 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii, will perform in two rings during tomorrow's opening National A. A. U. boxing program here.

The tourney, which lacks even a single 1936 champion in eight divisions, has attracted the best field since 1924, when it launched the brilliant careers of Fidel Labarba, Jackie Fields, Al Mello and many another.

Furr Risks New Nose In Arena Bout Tonight

By Bill McCormick.

Phillip Hamilton Furr, temperamental welterweight champion of the District, will risk his brand new nose against one of the most dangerous punchers in the division at Turner's Arena tonight when he faces Werther Arcelli, of Boston, in a scheduled 10-round feature.

Phillip has not appeared in a local ring since 1936, but has been campaigning with better than average success in and about New York City. He was scheduled to fight Arcelli three weeks ago, but decided the remodeling job on his nose had not healed enough to make it a durable target for a puncher of Arcelli's prowess.

Regardless of the outcome of tonight's bout, Furr will leave tomorrow night for the coast with his new manager, Chris Dundee, who will escort Ken Overlin to Seattle for a title bout with Middleweight Champion Freddie Steele.

Arcelli made an auspicious debut here by flattening Sid Silas in shorter time than Furr ever had been able to apply the chill to Sidney. He followed up three weeks ago by trouncing Johnny Lucas, the same lad who once held Furr to a draw and another time defeated him.

Furr Is Favorite.

Rumor hath it that Phillip has not had sufficient time to achieve his top condition for tonight's tussle. Despite the rumors, the wagering gentry is laying 6 to 5 that Furr will be returned the winner.

Of almost equal interest is a scheduled six-round semifinal between Max Roesch and Frank Tymosko, a duo of promising heavyweights. Roesch came here two months ago widely heralded as a second Dempsey. In his first bout, in which he dropped a highly disputed decision to Russell (Hard Rock) Harden, Roesch failed to live up to his ballyhoo.

Roesch Beat Kanner.

In his next appearance here, Roesch handily disposed of Murray Kanner, former District amateur heavyweight champion. Kanner later whipped Tom Ponte, former intercollegiate champion, which gives some line on his ability.

Three weeks ago Tymosko and Roesch were matched, but the former Richmond University heavyweight received a cut eye in training and Frankie Wilson was substituted. Wilson floored Roesch in the first round, but the Texas heavyweight rose to batter him into complete submission in the second round.

Tymosko has an impressive string of knockouts, but none of his opposition has been of the caliber that has been shoved against Roesch. The bout will prove definitely which of the two clean-cut youngsters has possibilities.

Frankie DeAngelo, once ruler of the local featherweight division, will continue his comeback attempt against Russell Driscoll, of Balti-

Western Champions Win Opener of National Series.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 11—The St. Louis Shamrock soccer team, Western division champion, scored a 1-to-0 triumph over the New York Americans, Eastern standard-bearers, here today in the first of two games which will determine the national champion.

The title will be decided on total goals, and the squads will square off again next Sunday at New York.

The lone goal of the game, witnessed by 5,000 fans, was scored by Eddie Kane just a few seconds before the end of the first half. Another goal by Gilly Gonsalves in the waning seconds of the contest was not allowed by Referee Tommy Crompton, of Chicago.

Despite their crippled condition, with Manager Alex McNab out and Gonsalves ailing but playing, the Shamrocks delivered a fine game as they came through with their twenty-second triumph in 23 starts. The tussle added another casualty to their hospital list as Jimmy Roe went down with an injured knee.

Southern Wins.

The Southern Society defeated the Pi-Phi fraternity, 9 to 2, yesterday at Garrett Park. McCleod, on the mound for the winners, fanned 10 men.

Maryland Racing Scene Will Shift to Havre de Grace Today

$5,000 Race Is Lure for Star Horses

Whopper, Fraidy Cat Entry Likely Choice in 6-Furlong Test.

By Walter Haight.

With the promise of more and better horses, the Maryland racing scene shifts to Havre de Grace today with a program featured by the 5,000 added Harford Handicap. The 6-furlong sprint has drawn the best field to face a barrier in the State this spring and promises to be a bitterly fought contest.

As is usual this time in the year, The Harford will be a clash of horses primed by winter racing and those which have been away from racing, for the most part, since last fall. It is likely that the Hal Prince Headley entry of Whopper and Fraidy Cat will be backed into favoritism. They shipped up from Florida in excellent shape and have worked well over the Harford County course.

Washingtonians will be putting their faith in the ability of Aneriod, owned by J. Manfuso, D. C. business man. The son of The Porter made good with high weight in his last outing at Bowie. A. G. Vanderbilt is seeking the purse with Speed to Spare and Postage Due while the Denemark horses, Higher Cloud and Log, make their first appearance in the North without Trainer Bert Mitchell, now under suspension, to saddle them.

Dark Hope, J. W. Y. Martin's ancient star; the Bomar Stable's Billy Bee; the Araho Stable's New Deal, and Howard Bruce's Jay Jay are other prominent sprinters named for the battle.

The other six races draw ordinary-sized fields but the caliber of horses is several notches above those on exhibition at Bowie.

By Bill Ackerman.

The Post's All Outdoors Editor.

One of the greatest natural black bass areas is to be perpetuated and opened to fishing, while being maintained as a wild life sanctuary by the U. S. Biological Survey. Called Okefenokee Wildlife Refuge, it is that vast primeval wilderness of the Okefenokee Swamp in southeastern Georgia where the ivory billed woodpecker, limpkin or "crying bird," otter, and other fast dwindling wild birds and animals still find refuge.

ACKERMAN

A total of 479,450 acres has been included in the ultimate boundary, 293,825 having already been acquired. Little development work is planned, for it is desired to preserve the swamp in its natural state. Permits will be required for the regulated fishing and for visitors. Hunting and trapping will not be permitted.

According to Dr. Gabrielson, chief of the survey, "It will insure for posterity one of the most interesting features of our country. Among the fresh water swamps east of the Mississippi River it is exceeded only in size by the Everglades, and its variety and richness in animal and plant life have few, if any, counterparts."

The swamp is largely a wet timbered area containing an uneven stand of cypress, gum, bay and red maple, with such undergrowth as greenbrier and ti-ti bush. Most of the cypress are festooned with Spanish moss. Within the swamp are many marshlike open spaces, locally called "prairies." They contain scattered hummocks covered with cypress trees or bush, which in some instances extend over a thousand acres. Also there are many islands that are fairly high and dry.

According to legend, the Seminoles sought refuge in the swamp and called it Okefenokee, meaning "land of trembling earth." Masses of plants have grown so closely together there that they appear to be solid ground. Stepping on the bog causes it to tremble.

Studies by the survey show that this area is becoming increasingly important for waterfowl. At least 11 species visit the swamp during the year. The wood duck is a year-round inhabitant, and in recent years thousands of ring-necked ducks have adopted it as their winter home. Mallards, pintails, black ducks, hooded mergansers, and green-winged teal are among other kinds of waterfowl that winter there.

The great ivory-billed woodpecker, now on the verge of extinction, has maintained in Okefenokee one of it's last strongholds. The pileated woodpecker, scarcely less splendid than the ivory-bill, is abundant. The American egret, once nearly exterminated for it's plumes, breeds and winters in the swamp. The area is also one of the few places in Georgia where the sandhill crane and the limpkin are still found. The cranes are numerous, the limpkins few, it is about northern limit of the limpkin's present breeding range.

The swamp abounds in fish life, including pickerel, large mouth and other basses, short nosed gar, chub sucker, mudfish, catfish and killifishes. Among other forms of wildlife that live there are the otter, white-tailed deer, black bear, wildcat, skunk, round-tailed muskrat, raccoon, opossum, wood ibis, Ward's heron, water turkey, bob white and many others, some of which are limited in their distribution to the swamp.

The perch fishing up the Potomac is at its height. If you want to get it at its best, go this week, because the herring are due to arrive before another week-end rolls around. Regardless of it being rather early for rock, there is a fine chance to pick up one or two, and sizable ones at that.

In spite of the cold, Joe Fletcher reported them Saturday night as biting as fast as you could pull them in.

There have been many inquiries as to whether Colvin Run (Wheelers Mill Run) has been stocked this year. It has, and, in addition, several sections of Difficult, of which Colvin is a feeder. If you would like to see moving pictures of the actual work as well as other pictures of trout fishing and stream work, attend the meeting tonight at 8 of the Northern Virginia Wildlife Federation in the Public Service audiorium in Alexandria.

At The Post

DEAR AL: Selections at Havre de Grace.

I sort of expected Clocker Mike to show up at Bowie last Saturday. Each time someone came in the pressbox door, I looked up hoping that it would be the watch toter. Of course, he did not show. However, if I can believe the eyesight of one of the horsemen who arrived here in the afternoon after driving up from Florida, Mike is losing a lot of ground. On Friday I had a report that he was chopping wood outside a Richmond lunchroom. Now this horseman said he saw Mike Friday night at Sumter, S. C. If that is true, Mike may be jailed as a Northern spy by now. You know as to how he can't keep that trap of his shut. Trainer Bert Michell, banned by the Florida racing solons for alleged doping of a horse, has had ups and downs in the racing game. He first came into prominence in this country by saddling Reigh Count, winner of the 1928 Kentucky Derby. He also trained the famous Anita Peabody. Both were owned by John D. Hertz, of Chicago. From the time that he broke with Hertz until Emil Denemark decided to buy horses to be raced in his wife's name, Michell had a hard row to hoe in racing. If Michell has enemies in racing it is probably because of his frequent claims. He has refused to go into the agremeents that many other horsemen foster. He has claimed horses whenever he thought he was getting a bargain, regardless of whose toes he tread upon. I'm not saying that Michell's actions along this line have anything to do with that Florida ruling. BILL.

First race—Royal Rhapsody, a stablemate of Smoke Signal, is said to be a classy juvenile. This one was entered at Bowie, but was scratched with this test in view. Needs only the right ride, and I believe Johnny Gilbert will supply that. Low Cuts has been kidding, so I am told. Might surprise here. The Bomar entry of Mr. Jacko and Detroit Bull should gain a money position.

Second race—Bill Donoghue is reported to be fit as a fiddle and rarin' to run. Seems nicely placed here and will have LeBlanc to do the riding. Miney Myerson is dangerous and likes the track. Buster Boy failed at Bowie, but should go well in this.

Third race—San Antioca is reported to be ready to crack down in this field. Gets in light and I'm going to string along. Aroused looms as the one to beat. My Surprise had an outing at Bowie and will be dangerous.

Fourth race—Sharpshooter has been rested since turning in some good efforts in California. Has worked well hereabouts and I look for a winning performance. Gold Band, a well-regarded Bomar speedster, is a threat in this company. Uneasy for the show end.

Fifth race—Jay Jay, Howard Bruce's sprinter, has marched postward only occasionally but has a high percentage of victories. This is one of those rare horses that doesn't need a race to put him in shape. I look for a win at the first asking. Aneroid off that recent good Bowie race should take the place. Whopper and Fraidy Cat to battle it out for the show.

Sixth race—Uncle Lester did some nice racing late in the Florida season. Shipped well and I'm going to try to chase him home. Tonianna and Khay to complete the money bracket.

Seventh race—Snobby Scamp has some good trials but hasn't been to the races. I'm willing to take my chances. Braving Danger fits nicely in the spot and will be ready to score if the top one needs a race. Koterito is better than that last.

Best bet—Bill Donoghue.

Furr to Risk Nose In Arena Tonight

more, in a four-round preliminary. Two other four-rounders will complete the program.

Post Predictions.

Bouts are rated from A (Action) to G (Goshawful slow).

Main event—Phil Furr, Washington, vs. Werther Arcelli, Boston, welterweights; 10 rounds. Rated C. This one is a toss-up, especially since Arcelli's style of boring into the body may hamper Phillip no end. Despite styles and despite Furr's lack of condition, we are stringing along with Phil, but it will be close.

Semifinal—Max Roesch, Dallas, Tex., vs. Frank Tymosko, Richmond, heavyweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Knockout string or no knockout string, Frank never has been in the ring with a fighter of Roesch's caliber. We look for Roesch to win, possibly by a knockout.

Preliminaries—Frankie DeAngelo, Washington, vs. Russ Driscoll, Baltimore, featherweights; 4 rounds. Rated C. DeAngelo is rounding into old-time fighting form and should score here.

Ole Anderson, Leonardtown, Md., vs. Mike O'Leary, Baltimore, welterweights; 4 rounds. Rated C. Anderson did it once and should repeat.

Killer Lamar, Washington, vs. Johnny (Drop) Harder, Washington, colored heavyweights; 4 rounds. Rated C. If Mike Uraime's heavyweight keeps plowing in he should be able to stop the Killer, who was exploded last summer.

Emergency bout—Johnny Stearn, Baltimore, vs. Vince Bonavaro, Washington, lightweights; 4 rounds. The former Washington amateur should score over Stearn.

Dinner Group Meets.

Forty-eight members of the Georgetown Varsity "G" dinner committee will meet tonight at the University Club to complete the arrangements for the annual Varsity "G" dinner, April 28.

Harris must take that into account and take into account, too, that Newsom is a big kid about these opening-day jobs. The big fellow would suffer a terrific loss of pride if Harris over-looked him for the role and Newsom's frame of mind is important to the Nats. They do not want a sulking Newsom.

Another manager might look over his staff the day before the opening game, figure out which of his pitchers had the best chance of winning, and haul off and name him for the job—but not Harris. Bucky's a strategist and a psychologist and he will give a thought, too, to those remaining 153 games on the schedule. He'll be trying to be smart about it.

Carolina Caddies Win in Pay Strike

Winston-Salem, N. C., April 11 (AP). Arm-folding caddies of the Forsyth Country Club won a moral but not immediately effective victory today in a strike for more pay.

More than a hundred of the little Negroes selected the day of the opening of the most important golfing event of the season to demand a 15-cent raise.

The officials gave in, and promised the caddies they would receive the 75 cents per 18 holes they demanded. The tournament got under way with only a slight delay.

Astor Clarke, Krauss Snare U. S. Pin Title

D. C. Pair Wins National Duckpin Doubles Prize With 809.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Norfolk, Va., April 11.—Astor Clarke and Bill Kraus, with a doubles score of 809, gave Washington its only championship in the National Duckpin Bowling Congress Tournament, which came to a finish here today at the Health Center Alleys.

The final day of the tenth annual event witnessed the Borders Friction Strip Company, of Springfield, Vt., composed of Baltimore bowlers, rocketed to the men's team championship with a tournament record score of 1,995.

Washington's leading team—Northeast Temple—dropped to fourth place with 1,844, when the Holland five, of Bridgeport, and the Seagram Crowns, of Willimantic, Conn., tied for second place with 1,847. Bill Tatto, member of Frank Barber's defending team champions, won the all-events with 1,194, as he finished up today with 379 with the Seagram Blue Ribbons, who tied for fifth place with the Black Rocks, of Bridgeport, with 1,809. Tatto shot 415 in doubles and 400 in singles.

The Walnut Beach rollers, of Milford, Conn., took the Booster team event with 1,814, relegating Galt Davis Arlington Trust, of Rosslyn, Va., to second place.

Doubles—A. Clarke, B. Krauss, Washington, D. C., 809.

Singles—W. E. Powell, Roanoke, Va., 439.

All Events—Bill Tatto, Waterbury, 1,194.

Booster Team—Walnut Beach, Milford, Conn., 1,814.

Virginia teams and representatives captured five first places out of nine events. In the women's singles Ida Simmons, No. 1 ranking woman star of the country, spilled the wood for 416, and went on to win the women's all events with 1,101.

Phyllis Wills and Dot Lawson, Richmond, were in front in the women's doubles with 738, while Billy Gauer and Dot Dudley, of Norfolk, won the mixed doubles with 777.

By the Associated Press.

The Bureau of Sandards said yesterday the camera is probably a better instrument than the human eye for spotting the winner in a close horse race.

Noting "caustic criticism" of camera decisions, it found a "curious situation" in the belief of spectators that they can always decide the winner in a nose-and-nose race.

"The spectators," the bureau said, "less favorably situated than the judges, do not hesitate to affirm their ability to correctly place the horses by visual observation, and, on the basis of their decision, accuse the camera of inaccuracy."

An hypothesis gradually has been evolved among spectators, the report continued, that the camera favors the outside horse. Citing that the camera is mounted over the track directly in line with the finish wire, the bureau said that if it is correctly mounted there is little chance of error.

It conceded there might be an error of less than an inch if there were competition for second place, because the finish photo would not show the competing horses directly at the line.

Mat Entries Close.

Allison Bows To Bitsy Grant At River Oaks

Overcomes Former Davis Cup Player in Four Sets; Mrs. Van Ryn Wins.

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., April 11.—Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, third ranking tennis player in the Nation and long a Davis Cup question mark, annexed his third successive River Oaks tournament title today by defeating Wilmer Allison, retired Cup and International tournament star. The count was 4—6, 6—3, 6—3, 6—4.

The Atlanta "giant killer" was extended most of the way in besting his old foe. It was the third time in a row the two stars had battled for the title.

Marjorie Van Ryn, of Austin, won the women's singles title by defeating another Wightman Cup player, Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Calif., 6—3, 6—2.

Grant was pushed to his best to overcome the fine playing of Allison. He was exceptionally accurate on corner placements and managed to drive past his battling opponent several times. Allison, however, was strong at the net and showed good form all the way.

The junior singles title went to Marvin Kantrowitz, University of Texas student from New York. He defeated Bobby Decker, Florida State junior champion.

Italian Five Wins Over French Quint

Rome, April 11 (AP).—A friendly crowd today watched an Italian basketball team defeat a French team, 44 to 35.

The game was played without incident, despite the cancellation Thursday of an Italian-French football game which was to have been played today in Paris.

The French basketball team came here in spite of an order from the French Federation forbidding it to play in Rome.

Pan-American Tribunal Wins Praise of Scott

Law Director for Carnegie Peace Group Hails Development.

Dr. James Brown Scott, director of the division of international law of the Carnegie Foundation for International Peace, yesterday welcomed the development of an international court for the American republics comparable to the world court at The Hague.

Dr. Scott in his annual report declared that American judges acting on inter-American controversies "would in many instances differ in greater or less degree from the decisions on non-American judges on the same controversies." Dr. Scott said that geography was a factor in judicial settlement of international disputes. There are European questions, he added, which pertain largely to the "Old World" and others arising in America which American opinion holds should be settled without the intervention of the rest of the world.

Hague Still Has Sway.

This does not mean that the court established at The Hague is to be deprived of jurisdiction over a controversy to which a state of the Americas may be a party," he went on. "Nor does it mean that even when both parties are states of the New World they may not, if they so desire, lay their disputes before The Hague court for decision. But it does point to the fact that in different sections of the international community special conditions have resulted in the development of international conceptions peculiarly adapted to the special needs of those regions. The broad principles of international law are universal, but their concrete application may and does vary because of particular circumstances."

Dr. Scott hailed the creation of an American academy of international law in this connection, as recommended by the Buenos Aires peace conference, as sincere flattery of the Academy of International Law at The Hague, sponsored by his organization among others. In order to interest American students in attending the academy, the division of international law has again offered four scholarships of $250 each to candidates who are especially qualified to take advantage of the instruction.

Referring to the discontinuance for the present of fellowships for the study of international law, Dr. Scott reported that there were sufficient teachers of international law and sufficient university courses to meet the most pressing problems formerly existing.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

At the fourth concert of the eighth biennial chamber music festival in the Library of Congress yesterday afternoon, the Coolidge Quartet gave first performances of Jerzy Fitelberg's Quartet No. 4, winner of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge prize for 1936, and a Quartet in E minor by Roger Sessions. Between the novelties, William Kroll and his associates played the B flat Quartet of Brahms with such admirable musicianship and spirit as to evoke an ovation from the audience. By the test of applause, it was Brahms who carried off the honors of the occasion, thanks to his sympathetic interpreters.

The prize-winning work of Fitelberg is in one long movement, consisting of a theme, numerous variations, and a fugue which dissolves in further variations. From a structural point of view, the composition is interesting for its multiple devices in varying the theme, which has in its original statement a somewhat angular form. Unattractive melodically, this theme has a strong initial impetus, and its dynamic vitality imparts a restlessness to the work as a whole. In place of emotion one finds energy, and this driving force seldom slackens. The idiom of the music is dissonant, with only a few points of consonance emerging here and there to relieve the ear from harmonic welter.

The E minor quartet of Roger Sessions is also cast in the harmonic speech which still bewilders the older generation of listeners. Here are no concessions whatever to sensuousness of melody and the richness of consonance characteristic of romantic tradition.

He evidently aims not at the traditional concepts of beauty, but at formal perfection through plastic means. In that sense he is a classicist whose severity is unyielding. He mistrusts glamor, and will have nothing to do with it. He is concerned with musical values alone and not with any associational suggestions of mood.

The final concert of the festival last evening was presented by a chamber orchestra of some 40 instruments under the direction of Carlos Chavez, with Paul Hindemith as viola soloist. On the program modernists alternated with classicists par excellence. The first on the list was Alessandro Scarlatti with a five-movement sinfonia in E minor, and after him came Carlos Chavez with a two-movement concerto for four horns, in which the young Mexican composer displayed a modern technique that would have made Scarlatti stare.

The pendulum of time then swung back to Haydn, represented by an unfamiliar Notturno in F major as serene and good-humored as any of his symphonies. Modernism had its turn again in Nikolai Berezovski's Introduction and Allegro, a work written ten years ago, but thoroughly revised for this concert.

Paul Hindemith, who had the honor of the entire program on Saturday morning, made his farewell appearance as soloist in his viola concerto, "Der Schwanendreher," thematically based on four German folk songs. After a slow prelude, the first movement progresses in a powerfully motorized allegro on the theme, "Zwischen Berg and tiefem Thal." The second movement has two contrasted parts—an adagio on the melancholy song, "Nun laube, Lindlein, laube," and a lively, saucy, five-voiced fugato, which works up a dance melody, "Der Gutzgauch auf dem Zaune sass."

The finale of the work is the most musically important. On the theme of "Der Schwanendreher" song, there are five brilliant variations in virtuoso style treated in a free rondo fashion. This movement bristles with difficulties for the solo instrument, but they were surmounted easily by Mr. Hindemith, who plays the viola as skillfully as he writes for it.

Pan America To Hear Speech By President

Hull Also on Program for Day's Seventh Anniversary.

The seventh anniversary of Pan American Day will be launched by a speech by President Roosevelt the morning of April 14, it was announced yesterday by the Pan American Union.

A concert of Latin American music and a speech by Secretary of State Cordell Hull will conclude the observance of the day in the National Capital.

While these events are taking place here, thousands of schools, colleges, clubs and other groups throughout the United States will be joining in the most extensive observance of the day ever held. Some 10,000 groups will participate.

Reports reaching the Pan American Union here indicate that the visit of the President to South America for the recent Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace has aroused greater interest than ever before in this country in inter-American affairs. A similar growth of interest in South America is reported here.

The Presidential address will be delivered before an assemblage of diplomats from all the Americas, at 11 o'clock the morning of April 14, and will be broadcast over all the principal radio networks, as well as carried by short wave to South America.

Toronto Labor Gives Support To G. M. Strike

40,000 Workers Approve Walkout in Ontario; Hepburn Assailed.

Sloan, General Motors president, was enlisting the aid of the Ontario and Canadian government in an attempt to impose "sweatshop labor conditions" in the automobile industry.

Homer Martin, international president of U. A. W., arrived to take personal command of the strike—the C. I. O.'s first attempt to invade Canada.

Martin said Hepburn was "the puppet of General Motors" and said the Premier had "better keep his mouth shut."

"General Motors will sign an agreement with the U. A. W.," he added, "and I expect it will be right soon. Or perhaps I should say it had better be right soon. Hepburn may have an army to start the plants over here, but his army won't work in the United States where General Motors wants to make cars."

General Motors plants in the United States are operating under a "permanent peace" signed after a 44-day strike.

Welcomes A. F. of L.

Hepburn, in Toronto, told the United Press he would welcome American Federation of Labor organizers in Ontario, but was opposed to C. I. O. "agitators." He called the activities of the A. F. of L. "orderly," as contrasted to the "illegal" methods of the C. I. O., meaning the sit-down strike.

The premier said he had not been approached by either side in the Oshawa strike with a request for resumption of negotiations. He added that the controversy could be settled immediately "if American agitators were excluded from the conference."

General Motors will not attempt to reopen the Oshawa plant in the near future, Hepburn said.

"General Motors officials," Hepburn said, "agreed yesterday to all demands of the employes except recognition of the U. A. W.

"The company will not recognize John L. Lewis and no settlement is possible with his paid agitators. But I'm willing to meet any group of Canadian auto workers."

By the Associated Press.

A new dispute was brewing yesterday in the railroad field as the growing wave of labor unrest continued its surge across the Nation.

District officials of the brotherhoods of railroad firemen and trainmen announced at San Francisco that 9,000 employes of the Southern Pacific Co. had voted almost unanimously in favor of a strike which would affect the company's Pacific lines.

Dr. W. S. Leisterson, chairman of the National Railway Mediation Board, was attempting to smooth the difficulties.

The unions charged breach of contractural agreements. Company spokesmen said it was a dispute over jurisdiction of unions representing different groups of workers.

In Michigan, Gov. Frank Murphy, who took office this year amid serious labor discord which continued in his State until last week, gave his attention to legislation designed to avoid a recurrence of serious disputes.

His contemplated program, he said, "will contribute to the elimination of strikes and labor discord much more than harsh and oppressive legislation."

Five Textile Contracts Claimed.

Attainment of five contracts with textile firms, affecting more than 1,300 wage earners, was claimed as the week-end achievement of the C. I. O. drive in textile industry, headed by Sidney Hillman.

A small band of relief demonstrators, which had been ejected from the offices of Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio, remained in a church in a Columbus colored district, and six of the leaders were in jail.

The State Senate will begin consideration tonight of a proposed $12,000,000 relief program to replace the provisions which expire April 15.

A strike was authorized for C. I. O. union members among the 5,000 employes of the Wagner Electric Corporation at St. Louis. The union has demanded recognition, wage boosts and reinstatement of certain discharged employes.

Similar action was taken a week ago in reference to the Century Electric Co., but so far no strike has been called at Century, which employes 1,800.

Senate Will Get Amendment Fixing Justices' Number at 9

Measure to Be Offered Along With Proposal for Increase of Six.

an advocate of the President's plan, in the first Congressional election in which the court proposals figured. The successful campaign of Lyndon B. Johnson for the Democratic nomination in the Tenth Texas District brought widely divergent reactions yestreday in Congress. The Associated Press reported that the six candidates favoring court reform received 21,628 to 7,051 for the two opponents.

"The election was the first test of the President's court plan since it was proposed," said Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky. "It ought to serve notice on some of those in opposition that they are not following the popular course."

Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, retorted, however:

"Johnson's advocacy of the President's court plan, I suppose, was the popular thing to do from a partisan standpoint. The result may be indicative of how the people feel, but some of us would rather sacrifice personal ambitions than succumb to a popular movement which strikes at the very fundamentals of our Government."

The election result became known on the eve of a visit today of 60 Texans, calling themselves the "Texas Supreme Court Defense Association," to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the court bill.

States' Examples Cited.

Senators on opposing sides in the court fight referred to this appearance in discussing significance of Johnson's victory. Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, said he would be highly interested to hear the delegation explain the result, while Burke, declaring that local issues are usually the prevailing questions in elections to the House, said the "Defense Association's" trip here is of more significance than the vote.

With reference to his substitute amendment, Burke said:

"Already 38 States, in which live more than 100,000,000 of our population, have fixed by Constitutional amendment the number of justices on their State supreme courts. I think it is time that we do so for our national Supreme Court.

"By establishing permanently the number of justices on their supreme courts, the States have removed definitely the temptation to governors and legislatures to tamper with the judiciary for partisan ends. Theirs is an instructive example for the Nation as a whole."

In view of developments since he proposed his original amendment, Burke said he would vote against that amendment unless it was modified to protect the court in the manner offered by his substitute.

Dual Debate Proposed.

The strategy of foes of the court plan, or of a considerable number of them, is to put before the Senate at the same time with the President's bill a measure embodying concretely the opposing philosophy, so that the two may be debated at once.

Even if there is a majority in the Judiciary Committee unfavorable to the President's bill, Burke said last night he believed the bill should be reported out with an adverse opinion and debated in the Senate.

Burke said last night he believed it will be a month yet before the President's bill is reported out of committee, and indicated that he regards it as unlikely hearings can be ended this week. The Judiciary Committee will meet in executive session in midweek to discuss the matter.

The hearings will resume today just prior to the Supreme Court's meeting for its regular Monday opinion day, during which the long-awaited Wagner act ruling may be handed down. If it is not delivered at this time, no decision will be possible before April 26, when the court reconvenes following a recess.

Witnesses to Be Heard.

The witnesses who will speak for the Texas delegation at today's hearing are Dr. C. P. Patterson, of the University of Texas school of government; John H. Crooker, Houston lawyer, and L. L. James, Tyler lawyer.

Maj. George Berry, president of Labor's Nonpartisan League, announced last night the speakers for the major mass meetings in the Nation-wide series the league is arranging for April 19 in support of the President's proposals. They are as follows:

New Orleans, Gov. Richard W. Leche of Louisiana and Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania; Indianapolis, Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington; Baltimore, Representative Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, and Robert Fechner, director, emergency conservation work; Boston, John G. Winant, former chairman of the Social Security Board and Republican Governor of New Hampshire; Kansas City, Senator Truman (Democrat), Missouri, and Representative Wood (Democrat), Missouria; New York, Senator Logan (Democrat), Kentucky; Philadelphia, Senator La Follette (Republican), Wisconsin; Monessen, Pa., Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania.

At that time the union claimed 3,000 members, and Long estimated 1,000 participated in the first walkout. Approximately 5,000 men then were employed in the fields.

Fist fights among workers followed, and several persons were injured, none seriously.

Two hundred National Guardsmen and many special officers were sent into the mining area to maintain order. The guardsmen escorted workers into the plant of the Eagle Picher Mining and Smelting Co. July 16, 1935, and operations were resumed. Outbreaks continued, however, and a main gas line to Galena was blasted August 20, 1936.

By September 20, M. D. Harbaugh, secretary of the Tri-State (blue card) Union, said the miners were returning to their work under improved conditions.

Increased zinc prices resulted in decreased unemployment in the arear, and some of the mining plants started operations on 24-hour schedules. Zinc prices rose sharply.

The area is almost solely dependent upon mining for its income. First developments were started in 1870 and Picher, Okla., one of the larger cities in the area, became known as the "City that Jack built," Jack being the miners' term for zinc ore.

Galena has a population of approximately 5,000, and Picher, nearly 8,000.
